PREFACE.

THE following pages represent the first attempt to classify and reduce to a written form the grammar and vocabulary of the language spoken by the Motu tribe of New Guinea. As a first attempt it is necessarily imperfect, but I need make no apology for its publication. The first step towards accuracy and correctness is only taken when the result of observation and study is put into print.

The vocabulary in both parts would have been more full if I had been able, while in New Guinea, fully to prepare it for the Press. When I came to Sydney three months ago, I brought with me in MS. the material for the following pages, but had no intention of printing it. The ready promise of the Hon. A. Stuart, on behalf of the New South Wales Government Press, and the kindly offer of the Rev. G. Pratt to arrange the work and prepare it for the printer, induced me to give to the public that which would have been better for another year's research and preparation.

But for Mr. Pratt's experienced pen and unwearied patience, the work would not have been half so good or complete as it is.

My knowledge of the language has been acquired during seven years residence among the people who speak it.

My colleague, Mr. Chalmers, has contributed largely both to grammar and vocabulary, but must not be held responsible for anything I have published, as there has been no opportunity of submitting the work to him for revision before going to press.

In carrying out the provisions of the Protectorate, which has been proclaimed over part of New Guinea, it will be of the first importance that all who have to do with the natives in an official capacity should be able to speak with the people in their own language. This little work will, I hope, be of some use to those who may be located in the Port Moresby district. From the knowledge we have of the dialects spoken in the Hood Bay and South Cape districts, there is every reason to believe that the grammar of the language of the S.E. Coast, from Maiva to the East Cape, is practically the same, the only difference being in the vocabulary. The consonantal changes in the different dialects are very remarkable. Consonants of different classes taking the place of each other, as for instance t being exchanged for l or r.

In the Motu dialect the sibilant never occurs before an a, o, or u, but at South Cape we meet with the s before all vowels, and find the Samoan words—isu, nose, and susu, breast.

On my return I hope to be able to prepare something like a comparative grammar and specimen vocabulary of the different dialects spoken in the districts where we have mission stations established. I have to ask all using the following pages kindly to supply me with any additions or corrections they may discover, so that the next edition may be a much nearer approach to accuracy and completeness.

W. G. LAWES.

Sydney, March 24th, 1885.

INTRODUCTION.

In the grammar of the Motu dialect of New Guinea one peculiarity is in the use of letters so much alike as to be scarcely distinguishable, e.g., the letters b and p, keboka or kepoka; d and t, bāda or bāta; g and q, qanua or guanua; r and l, ara and ala.

The pronunciation of t before e and i, as ts, is also a recent introduction to Niue or Savage Island. When we first went there we found the young people generally using it, whilst the old men, especially on public occasions, pronounced the t. In the same way, the Tahitians have changed b into p; the Sandwich Islanders have changed t into k, and the Samoans are endeavouring to do the same. As these islands had little or no communication with one another, how is it that these changes, as if by common consent, have been made?

The Motuan language seems to be a strange mixture of Papuan and Eastern Polynesian. The grammar is Papuan, the dictionary is Eastern Polynesian. The suffixed pronoun and the method of counting by two threes for six, and two fours for eight, is Papuan. Very peculiar is the declension of the noun by means of pronouns; also, the use of both the separate and the suffix pronoun with the noun, Lau aegu, my leg, mine.

Suffix pronoun.	Duke of York Island.
gu, I	g
im, your	m
na, his	n

These are evidently Papuan roots, made to conform to Eastern Polynesian by adding a vowel to the termination.

Many of the words seem to have Papuan roots, but all take the form of Eastern Polynesian.

The formation of the noun by adding na to the verb is like the Samoan ga, used in the same way. The use of a, in relation to food, adia for idia, corresponds with the Samoan lau for lou.

Some of the numerals are Eastern Polynesian—ta, one; rua, two; hitu, seven. Hui, a hair used for ten, resembles the fulu hair or feather in Samoan, and seems to indicate the same use of a tally in counting. The singular pronouns, lau, oi, ia, are Eastern Polynesian (au, oe, ia). The plural are Papuan.

Having different words for counting different articles, is, as far as I know, in use only in the East.

A Tahitian idiom is seen in the word hanamoa (lit., to make good) to praise. In Tahitian, haamaitai.

The dearth of particles, and the arrangement of words in a sentence, seem to make the sense obscure. "He Jerusalem journey made, he towns and villages passed through, he them taught went." That is a literal translation of Luke 13, 22.

In arranging and copying out the Dictionary, I was struck with the numerous divergencies from the Eastern Polynesian dialects, and with the very large number of words which have no counterpart there.

Though t is much used, it is often changed to d, as daudu for tautu. It is also prefixed to some words beginning with a vowel or h, as diho for ifo or hifo, dae for ae or hake. In the same way l is prefixed, as lahi for afi, and is often omitted in the beginning or middle of a word, as tui for tuli, ima for lima.

G being nasal in Eastern Polynesian, is omitted, as tai (to cry) for tagi, taia (an ear) for taliga, lao for lago (a fly). On the contrary g hard is inserted, as tage for tae.

M is substituted for g, as matama for amataga. Again it is prefixed, as in miri (gravel) for ili. N is omitted, as maino for manino. Having no f, p or h is substituted for it, as pata for fata.

Yet more strange is the alteration of vowels. A long is put for short a, as māta (the eye) for mǎta, mānu (a bird) for mǎnu. O is put for u, as namo (a mosquito) for namu, ramo (to chew) for lamu.

Some words change their meaning, as lele (to swim) means to fly in Eastern Polynesian. Hanua (a village) for fanua (land). Tunua (to burn pottery) for tunu (to roast). Sinavai (a river) for a water-fall.

The following are from pure Eastern Polynesian roots :—

New Guinea.	Eastern Polynesian.	English.
adorahi	ahiahi	evening
gauaiai	gau	to chew cane
gahu	asuasu	mist, fog
hetuturu	tutulu	to drip
hekalo	tālo	to beckon
huahua	fua	fruit
hururu	sulu	torch
kanudi	anu	to spit
kaubebe	pepe	butterfly
kalo	alo	to paddle
sisina	sina	small piece
papapapa	papapapa	flat rock
tamana	tama	father
tupuna	tupuga	ancestors
laoevaeva	evaeva	to go about laka	laka	step
mavamava	mavava	to yawn
motu	motu	to break
motumotu	motu	an island
mu	gu	dumb
noho	nofo	to sit
nohu	nofu	stinging fish
noinoi	faanoi	to beg
qalahu	ahu	smoke
raroa	vailaloa	flood rua	rua	two
sinana	tinā	mother
taoatao	taotao	to press down
tari	foe talitali	steer oar
togo	togo	mangrove

The number of compound words and of doubled words is very observable. In the latter case they were not satisfied, as their Eastern brethren are, with doubling part of the word, but repeated the whole, as hekisehekise.

From the meanings of the words of the Dictionary, many of the customs of the people may be learnt. We find there, that though naked savages, they are fond of adorning themselves with feather head dresses and chaplets with strings of teeth, shell-armlets, and a bone passed through the nose as a "nose-jewel." In addition to these, they paint their bodies, and also tattoo; this is done by making a black paint with burnt resin and water. With this they mark the design on the body of the young man who is to be operated on. Then the skin is punctured by an instrument dipped in the black paint and driven in by a tap with the mallet.

Besides the usual articles of food, consisting of taro, yams, bananas, sugarcane, and cocoanuts, they have sago which they make into puddings with bananas. They cook their food by boiling in an earthenware pot; or if an animal, they roast it on a spit. Banana leaves serve for plates. In times of scarcity they eat the stalk of the banana.

Fish is grilled on a gridiron of sticks. They also cook with heated stones after the manner of the Eastern Polynesians. The Elema people cook sago in hard cakes, which they sell.

When going to fight, they paint their faces red. Their weapons are a spear, bow and arrows, a stone-headed club, and the man-catcher. This last article consists of a loop at the end of a pole, which being put over the head of the retreating foe, on to his neck, held him back. It is armed with a sharp point so as to pierce the back of the neck. A newly married man is exempt from war.

They make earthenware pots and other vessels for domestic use. In order to shape them, in one hand they hold a stone, and insert it inside of the vessel, while with the other hand, they fashion the outside with a small piece of flat wood. Their pottery has an ornamental marking on the edge of the bowl, which is equivalent to the trade mark of civilized nations. Dry banana leaves are used for packing when exported.

Besides pottery, they use the cocoanut shell for a drinking cup. To keep oil or fat, they carve a cocoanut shell, and make a cover to it.

A kind of ship is made by lashing several canoes together. Caulking is effected with banana leaves and the gum of a tree. On the top of these canoes is erected a platform with a house at either end. In these houses they stow away the crockery which is taken to be exchanged for sago. The captain has a separate place in which to stow away his crockery. In these ships, they make long voyages. Before starting a farewell dance of an indecent character is held.

To assist the steering of these unwieldy structures, large long paddles are let down by the side, and they act as centre-boards.

Like Eastern Polynesians, they beat out the inner bark of the paper-mulberry, with which they make cloth. They also plait mats. Large netted bags are used by the women in which to carry their children, and smaller bags of the same kind are used for carrying other articles. They have nets for fishing, and also for catching kangaroos, wild pigs, and dugong. Fish are also speared.

Charms are used, such as a smooth stone to make the yams grow. Also one particular leaf of the banana, that nearest the bunch of fruit (gōgō) is thought to make yams fruitful. Coming events are foreshown by sneezing or by quivering of the body. By cracking the fingers they predict the coming home of a ship. During the absence of the men on a voyage, a sacred woman performs certain rites to ensure the safe return of the voyagers. Incantations are used to bring misfortune and death on an obnoxious party. A man in a fit is supposed to be possessed of a demon. The spirits of those killed are believed to appear to survivors in some dreadful form. They believe in spirits who are malevolent; and that certain persons have influence over them, so as to secure their services in executing vengeance on enemies. In sickness, the soul leaves the body, and it is the province of the sorcerer to find and bring it back. Passes are made by the sorcerer over the body of the sick man. He receives a payment for his services.

Some of the prevalent diseases are, abscess, ulcers, yaws, rash, rheumatism, whitlow, erysipelas, thrush, vomiting, constipation, fits, palsy, dropsy, and elephantiasis. Sickness is sometimes caused by sleeping on the place where visitors have slept a night or two previously. Villages were sometimes deserted on account of sickness often occurring in it In drawing blood they use a flint pointed instrument like a small arrow, with this, they lanced the forehead by repeatedly discharging it from a small bow. This was the cure for headache. Friends pay visits to their sick friends.

Suicide is committed either by drowning or hanging, or by leaping from a tree or a cliff. Hired assassins are made use of. When grieving for the dead, they scratch their faces, so as to draw blood, or else they cut themselves with a flint or shell. A coarse cloth is worn as a mourning garment, or a cane is plaited round the body. The beat of a drum answers to the funeral knell. On the death of a husband, an enclosure of mats is made round the grave; inside of this the widow sits and mourns. They bury their dead.

By way of sports, they have a spinning top. They have a low swing, and also a very high one depending from the top of a high leaning cocoanut palm. They practice throwing the spear, and they run races. A musical instrument is made of reeds; and a drum by stretching a green skin over a hollow wooden frame. Native poets compose songs, for which they are paid. The betel nut is chewed.

They marry and are polygamists. Divorce is common. The woman is betrothed to a husband, but breaches of promise are in vogue. Gifts are made in expectation of a return gift. Like civilized people, credit is sometimes given. The stomach is considered to be the seat of the affections; hence, to feel pity is to have the stomach-ache. Cocoanuts are made taboo as in Eastern Polynesia by plaiting a cocoanut leaf round a tree. Fences for their gardens are made by sticks, or split bamboos, placed lengthways, like a hurdle fence. The waterpot is carried either on the head or shoulder. To pass along in front of a chief is regarded as a mark of disrespect.

Hospitality is shown to strangers; but treachery is practised to an enemy. He is invited to partake of food, and then killed, as Amnon was by Absalom.

They have distinguishing terms for the hospitable, kind-hearted, good-tempered, courteous man; and also for the abusive, churlish man. The industrious man, the one who stores up for future use, is praised; while the lazy man and the thief are abused. Thus "they show the law written in their hearts, their conscience bearing witness therewith, and their thoughts one with another accusing or else excusing them."

GEO. PRATT.

GRAMMAR OF MOTU LANGUAGE.

THE Motu language is spoken by the Motu tribe living at Port Moresby, Pari, Borebada, Lealea, and Manumanu; also by natives of Delena, Boera, Tatana, Vabukori, Tupuselei, Kaile, and Kapakapa. There are considerable local differences in pronunciation.

LETTERS.

The Motu alphabet consists of nineteen letters, viz.,—a, e, i, o, u, b, d, g, h, k, l, m, n, p, q, r, s, t, v.

A is pronounced,—

1st. Long as in "father"; vāra to grow.

2nd. Short, as in "mat"; harihari, to-day; varavara, relations.

E, i, o, u, are pronounced as in Continental languages.

There are slight differences in quantity for which no rules can be given.

Usually e is sounded as a in take.
i ,, ea ,, eager.
o ,, o ,, no.
u ,, oe ,, shoe.

The consonants are for the most part pronounced as in English.

B native name bi. This is generally sounded as b in bad; but in some cases it approaches nearly to the p sound, and when pronounced quickly is scarcely distinguishable from p.

D native name di, as d in dip. Like b this has the rougher and softer sound; sometimes it is almost t.

G native name ga, as g in good. In some words it has a sound between the ordinary g and k; as āu ginigini, a nettle; but āu ginigini (almost k), a thorny tree.

H native name eti (pronounced etsi). (The reason for the name of this letter being at variance with rule is that a large number of natives who speak the Motu language drop the h, the name to them would be the same as the vowel e.) This is the nearest a native can pronounce to the English name of the letter. It is a characteristic of the Pari and some other natives to drop the h entirely; they pronounce hanua, anua; haine, aine, &c.

K native name ke, as k in key.

L native name la, as l in lady.

M native name mo, as m in man.

N native name nu, as n in now.

P native name pi, as p in pig.

Q native name kiu, as q in queen. The q in Motuan does not take an u after it.

R native name ro, as r in robber.

S native name sa, as s in sing. S never occurs in Motuan before an a or u, and rarely before o.

T native name ti. Before a, o, or u it is sounded as t in take. Before e or i it becomes ts, like the Tsade in Hebrew, raruoti pronounced raruotsi.

V native name vi, as v in victor.

Of diphthongs there are two :—

ai pronounced like English ai in aisle.
au ,, ,, ow in cow.

No two consonants can ever stand together without a vowel between.

SYLLABLES.

Every syllable must end in a vowel, hence every syllable is an open one, and in introducing foreign names or words this should be remembered. The natives will always so divide a word that each syllable will end in a vowel.

ACCENT.

As a rule the accent is on the penultima; but there are exceptions.

When suffixes are added the accent is shifted forward, as haìne, hainèna, mèro, meròna.

Reduplicated words have the two accents of the simple form, as kadàra, kadàra-kadàra.

The natives of Tupuselei, Kapakapa, and Kaile, are known by the peculiarity of raising the voice on the last syllable of the sentence.

WORDS.

1. THE ARTICLE.

There does not seem to be any distinctive definite article.

Harī, an adverb of time, now, is often used as a definite article. Hari kekeni, the girl.

In the same way, varani, yesterday, vanegai, the other day, and idaunegai, a long time ago, are used, where in other languages an article would be employed. Varani lakatoi, the ship, the particular ship which came yesterday, or about which we talked yesterday. Vanegai ira edeseni?—Day before yesterday, hatchet, where?

Ta (an abbreviation of tamona) one, is used as indefinite article, as, Lakatoi ta vata emaimu, a ship is coming.

2. THE NOUN.

Nouns are primitive, as āu, a tree; nadi, a stone; or derivative, as igui, a bundle; from guia, to tie.

Nouns are formed from verbs by prefixing i to the verb root, as kokoa, to nail; ikoko, a nail; lapaia, to smite; ilapa, a sword. When the noun is the agent performing the action of the verb, tauna is added, as kaha, to help; ikahana tauna, a helper. Also by he prefixed, as dibagani, to tempt; hedibagani, a temptation; nanadai, to question; henanadai, a questioning.

Some nouns are formed from verbs by suffixing na, as doko, to end; dokona, the end.

GENDER.

Gender is sometimes expressed by different words:—

Tau, man.	Haine, woman.
Mero, boy.	Kekeni, girl.
Dabari, male wallaby.	Miara, female wallaby.

When there is no distinct word the gender of animals is distinguished by adding maruane, male, and haine, female, respectively, as, boroma maruane, boar, boroma haine, sow.

NUMBER.

The plural is sometimes indicated by reduplicating one syllable, as Mero, boy. Memero, boys.

Or by dropping one or even two syllables, as Tauhau, a young man. Uhau, young men.

Haniulato, maiden. Ulato, maidens.

There seems to be no certain means of indicating the plural, nadi, is stone or stones; ruma, house or houses. As soon however as they can be put in the possessive, then the termination dia distinguishes the plural, as uma nadidia, the stones of the garden; hanua rumadia, village houses, i.e. the houses of the village.

Dia is sometimes added to the simple noun as, tau, man; taudia, men; haine, woman; hainedia, women. In most cases perhaps another noun is understood, as in taudia in the above example, hanua village, or iduhu family may be understood. Dia is the pronominal suffix of third person plural (see below). It may in some cases be the first syllable of diagau many. Words signifying multitude are also used with the singular to denote plural, as Au momo, many trees.

Mānu diagau, many birds.
Hanua logora, many towns.

CASE.

Case is indicated by prepositions and suffixes. The nominative is the simple form, and may be known by its position in the sentence, always standing first, as Qarume umui o abia, the fish you have taken.

The Genitive is expressed by adding the suffix na singular and dia plural for parts of the body, and family relations, as Lohiabada aena, chief leg his, i.e., the chief's leg.

Mero sinana, boy mother his, i.e., the boy's mother.

In other cases, such as property, land, weapons, &c., ena is placed after the principal noun, and before that of which it is possessed.

Lohiabadu ena ruma, chief his house, i.e., the house of the chief.

Kekeni ena dabua, girl her dress, i.e., the dress of the girl.

Plural nouns take the plural suffix dia instead of na in the singular, and edia for ena, as Memero aedia, boys leg theirs, i.e., the legs of the boys.

Hanua taudia edia rumadia, village men their houses, i.e., the houses of the villagers.

Food takes ana and adia instead of ena and edia, as Haine ana maho, woman her yam, i.e., the yam of the woman.

Memero adia tohu, boys their sugar cane, i.e., the sugar cane of the boys.

The Dative is expressed by ena following the noun or ana if food, as :—

Dabua sinada ena, dress our mother his, i.e., the dress is for the mother.

Bigu tamada ana, banana our father his, i.e., the banana is for the father.

For plural see genitive above.

The Accusative is known by its position in the sentence, and also by dekena an adverb of proximity.

Lohiabada dekena lao, chief by side of go ; go to the chief.

Dekena is often shortened into ena.

The Vocative is indicated by e sometimes o following the noun.

Tamagu e ! O my father.

Sinagu o ! O my mother.

The Ablative is governed by amo from, as Guba amo mai, heaven from come, i.e., from the heaven.

By addition of lalona inside, as :—

Ruma lalona ai, house inside it, i.e., in the house.

By laia suffixed to the verb of which it is the agent or instrument, as :—

Ia mero heaulaua, he, child ran away with, i.e., he ran away with the child.

Dabua hurilaia ranu, clothes wash with water, i.e., water to wash clothes with.

The noun with its cases is as follows :—

Singular.

Nom.	Haine, woman.
Gen.	Haine ena, of a woman.
Dative.	Haine ena, for a woman.
Accus.	Haine dekena, to a woman.
Voca.	Haine e, O woman !
Abla.	Haine amo, from a woman.
	Haine lalonai, in a woman.

Plural.

Nom.	Hainedia, women.
Gen.	Hainedia edia, of women.
Dative.	,, ,, for women.
Accus.	,, dekedia, to women.
Voca.	Hainemui e, O women !
Abla.	Hainedia amo, from women.
	,, lalodiai, in women.

3. THE ADJECTIVE.

The adjective is known rather by its position in the sentence than by anything distinctive in its form. It follows its noun, as, ira namo, a good hatchet. Personal qualities are most frequently expressed by two nouns in apposition, the person following the quality, as :—

Goada tauna, a strong man, literally, strength of man. Tau goada is less frequently used.

A kind of compound adjective is used by union of a noun with an adjective, as, Haine udu mauri, a live-mouthed woman ; Lalo auka tauna, a hard-stomached man.

Diminutives are frequently expressed by reduplication, as, kekeni, girl ; kekenikekeni, little girl.

Adjectives expressive of colours are all reduplicated, as, kurokuro, white ; koremakorema, black. By the addition of ka the quality is modified ; kurokakuroka, whitish ; gano, sharp edge ; ganokaganoka, sharpish ; paripari, parikaparika, damp.

Comparison is effected by using two adjectives in the positive state, as, inai namo, this is good; unai dika, that is bad.

Also by using the word herea, to exceed, as, namo herea, very good, the best.

Also by using sibona, only, as, ia sibona namo, he only is good.

Numerals.

The cardinals are :—

Tamona,	One.
Rua,	Two.
Toi,	Three.
Hani,	Four.
Ima,	Five.
Tauratoi,	Six.
Hitu,	Seven.
Taurahani,	Eight.
Taurahani ta,	Nine.
Qauta,	Ten.
Qauta ta,	Eleven.
Qauta rua,	Twelve.
Rua ahui,	Twenty.
Toi ahui,	Thirty.
Hari ahui,	Forty.
Ima ahui,	Fifty.
Tauratoi ahui,	Sixty.
Hitu ahui,	Seventy.
Taurahani ahui,	Eighty.
Taurahani ta ahui,	Ninety.
Sinahu,	One hundred.
Sinahu rua,	Two hundred.
Daha,	One thousand.
Gerebu,	Ten thousand.
Domaga,	One hundred thousand.

Ordinals.

Same as cardinals after the first, which is generally guna.

Numeral adverbs, twice, thrice, &c., are expressed by ha prefixed to cardinals, as, harua, twice; hatoi, thrice, &c.

Things of length, such as spears, poles, &c., are counted differently. The numerals have au prefixed, as, auta, aurua, and so on up to nine, which is autaurahaniauta, and ten, atalata.

Rabu rua,	20	Rabu hitu,	70
Rabu toi,	30	Rabu taurahani,	80
Rabu hani,	40	Rabu taurahani ta,	90
Rabu ima,	50	Sinahu,	100
Rabu tauratoi,	60

Fish and some other things are counted differently to ordinary things.

Of fish, pigs, and wallaby, the ordinary numerals are used up to ten, which is bala ta; 20, bala rua; and so on up to 100, which is the same as ordinary, sinahu.

Cocoanuts are counted by varo (strings), as, varo ta, 10; varo rua, 20, &c.

4. PRONOUNS.

The cases of Pronouns are expressed by suffixes. The dual is formed by adding raruoti to the corresponding plural, as, umui raruoti, you two.

There are two pronouns for the first person plural, one inclusive (ita) which is used when the person addressed is included, the other exclusive (ai) which excludes the person addressed.

PERSONAL PRONOUNS.

Lau,	I.
Oi,	Thou.
Ia,	He or she.
Ai,	We (exclusive).
Ita,	We (inclusive).
Umui,	You.
Idia,	They.
Ai raruoti,	We two (exclusive).
Ita raruoti,	We two (inclusive).
Umui raruoti,	You two.
Idia raruoti,	They two.

POSSESSIVE PRONOUNS.

Lauegu,	My.
Oiemu,	Thy.
Iena,	His.
Ai emai,	Ours (exclusive).
Ita eda,	Ours (inclusive).
Umui emui,	Yours.
Idia edia,	Theirs.

All kinds of food take a, as Lauagu : my, &c., &c.

For parts of the body and relations the personal pronoun precedes the noun, and the following terminations are suffixed to it :—

Gu,	1st person singular.
Mu,	2nd ,,
Na,	3rd ,,
Mai,	1st person plural (exclusive).
Da,	,, ,, (inclusive).
Mui,	2nd ,,
Dia,	3rd ,,
As Lau aegu,	My leg.
Oi aemu,	Thy leg.
Ia aena,	His leg.
Ai aemai,	Our (exclusive) legs.
Ita aeda,	Our (inclusive) legs.
Umui aemui,	Your legs.
Idia aedia,	Their legs.

DISTRIBUTIVE PRONOUNS.

Tā tā,	Each, as Idia tā tā koau, they each spoke.
Umui ta,	One of you, &c.

DEMONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS.

Inai,	This.	Singular and Plural.
Enai,	That—close to.
Unai,	That—distant, or opposite to.

INDEFINITE PRONOUNS.

Haida,	Some—others.
Ta,	Any one.
Idau,	Another.

INTERROGATIVES.

Daika,	Who? Daidia, who? plural.
Dahaka,	What? Singular and plural.
Edana,	Which?
Edananegai,	When?

5. VERBS.

Verbs are for the most part primitive or underived words, as gini, to stand; noho, to dwell.

PERSON.

There is no change in the verb itself for person. It is expressed by the pronoun and a vowel or particle placed between it and the verb, as 1st person	Lau na diba,	I knew.

2nd ,,	Oi o diba,	You knew.
3rd ,,	Ia e diba,	He knew.

Plural.

1st person	Ai a diba,	We (exclusive) knew.
	Ita ta diba,	We (inclusive) knew.
2nd ,,	Umui o diba,	You knew.
3rd ,,	Idia e diba,	They knew.

TENSE.

Tense is indicated by particles placed immediately before the verb.

PRESENT: vata or vada, used also of past when the action is finished and complete, as Lau vata diba, &c., &c., I know.

PAST by the following particles:—

1st person	na	1st plural (exclusive)	a
		,, ,, (inclusive)	ta
2nd ,,	o	2nd ,,	o
3rd ,,	e	3rd ,,	e

Lau na diba,	I knew.
Oi o diba,	You knew, &c., &c.

PERFECT is generally expressed by me added to the vowel or particle of the past, as

Lau name diba,	I have known.
Oi ome diba,	You have known.

CONDITIONAL PERFECT.

Lau bama diba,	If I had known.
Oi boma diba,	If you had known.
Ia bema diba.	If he had known.

Plural.

Ai baiama diba,	If we (exclusive) had known.
Ita baitama diba,	If we (inclusive) had known.
Umui boma diba,	If you had known.
Idia baema diba,	If they had known.

FUTURE is known by the following words preceding the verb, viz.:

1st person	baina	1st plural (exclusive)	baia
		,, ,, (inclusive)	baita
2nd ,,	ba	2nd ,,	ba
3rd ,,	baine	3rd ,,	bae

as,

Lau baina diba, I shall know.
Ia baine diba, He shall know, &c., &c.

It is often used as a conditional, possible, future. When certainty is expressed do is placed before it. Lau do baina diba, I shall (certainly) know.

The b of the above is often dropped to express an immediate future, as Ita aita mate, We shall (soon) die.

The do above is often used with the negative to signify "not yet," but implying that it will take place. Ia do mai lasi, He has'nt yet come.

There is a present participle ending in mu which always takes the vowels of the past tense before it, as Lau na dibamu, I am knowing.

Oi o dibamu, You are knowing.
Ia e dibamu, He is knowing, &c., &c.

There is also a past participle ending in va which also takes the same vowels before it as the present participle. Lau na nohova, I was dwelling, &c., &c.

IMPERATIVE MOOD.

Expressed by a and ba both in singular and plural. In entreaty ame and bame are often used.

Oi a kamonai, Hear thou.
Oi ba itaia, Look thou.
Oi ame bokamai hisi, Have mercy on us.

INFINITIVE MOOD.

This has no distinctive form, but takes baina, &c., as in the future, as baina diba, ba diba, to know, &c., &c.

The word totona is also often used to express object, where in English we should use the infinitive, as Ia vata mai kamonai totona, He came to hear.

The Passive

Is sometimes expressed by the suffix of the person who is the subject of the verb being added to it, as Henao, to steal. Henaoa, to be stolen.

Lakatani, to leave. Lakatanigu, I am left.

Sometimes by the auxiliary verb to give, as Dagedage lau henigu, I am persecuted.

Literally, persecution me given to me.

The Causative.

This is formed by prefixing ha to the root, as Diba, to know. Hadiba, to cause to know.

The Reciprocal.

This is expressed by prefixing he and suffixing heheni to the verb, which is also generally reduplicated, as Hebadubaduheheni, To be angry one with another.

There is no verb to be. It is expressed by the pronoun and noun or adjective with a verbal particle as copula, as Lau vata dika, I am bad. Lau baina gorere, I shall be sick.

Mai, and, is sometimes used, as Bosea mai anina hani? Is there anything in the basket?

Ma used before the verb signifies continued action, as Ma tahua, To continue seeking.

Ma koau, To continue speaking.

Reduplication also signifies continued action, as Kadarakadara, To continue playing.

Lai or rai with the suffix of the person added to the verb denotes the instrumental "with" or objective "at," as Dabua hurilaia ranu, The water the clothes are washed with.

Ia niu ta lau koilaigu, He deceived me with a cocoanut.

Umui lau kirikirilaigu, You laugh at me.

Sometimes it means "of," as Koaulaia, To speak of or about.

PARADIGM OF VERB.

Itaia, to look.

INDICATIVE MOOD.

Present Tense.

Singular.

Lau vata itaia,	I look.
Oi vata itaia,	Thou lookest.
Ia vata itaia,	He looks.

Plural.

Ai vata itaia,	We (exclusive) look.
Ita vata itaia,	We (inclusive) look.
Umui vata itaia,	You look.
Idia vata itaia,	They look.

Past Tense.

Singular.

Lau na itaia,	I saw.
Oi o itaia,	Thou sawest.
Ia e itaia,	He saw.

Plural.

Ai a itaia,	We (exclusive) saw.
Ita ta itaia,	We (inclusive) saw.
Umui o itaia,	You saw.
Idia e itaia,	They saw.

Perfect Tense.

Singular.

Lau name itaia,	I have seen.
Oi ome itaia,	You have seen.
Ia eme itaia,	He has seen.

Plural.

Ai ame itaia,	We (exclusive) have seen.
Ita tame itaia,	We (inclusive) have seen.
Umui ome itaia,	You have seen.
Idia eme itaia,	They have seen.

Future Tense.

Lau baina itaia,	I shall see, or If I see.
Oi ba itaia,	Thou shalt see, or If thou dost see.
Ia baine itaia,	He shall see, or If he sees.
Ai baia itaia,	We (exclusive) shall see, or If we see.
Ita baita itaia,	We (inclusive) shall see, or If we see.
Umui ba itaia,	You shall see, or If you see,
Idia bae itaia,	They shall see, or If they see.

Another form is sometimes used for a more immediate future in which the b is dropped

Lau aina itaia.
Oi a itaia.
Ia aine itaia, &c.

Past Conditional Tense.

Lau bama itaia,	If I had seen.
Oi boma itaia,	If thou hadst seen.
Ia bema itaia,	If he had seen.
Ai baiama itaia,	If we (exclusive) had seen.
Ita baitama itaia,	If we (inclusive) had seen.
Umui boma itaia,	If you had seen.
Idia bema itaia,	If they had seen.

Participles.

Itaiamu,	Looking.
Itaiava,	Was looking.
Itaia koaulaia,	Was about to look.

These are declined like the other parts of the verb.

Lau na itaiamu,	I am looking.
Oi o itaiamu,	Thou art looking.
Ia e itaiamu,	He is looking.

Plural.

Ai a itaiamu,	We (exclusive) are looking.
Ita ta itaiamu,	We (inclusive) are looking.
Umui o itaiamu,	You are looking.
Idia e itaiamu,	They are looking.

Past Participle.

Lau na itaiava,
Oi o itaiava, &c., ,

IMPERATIVE MOOD.

The same as the Future Indicative, as—

Oi ba itaia, Look thou.

More commonly—

Oi a itaia.

In entreaty and invocation another form is used, as Oi ame itaia, Do thou look.

and

Oi bame itaia, &c.

INFINITIVE MOOD.

The same as the future—Baine itaia, To look.

The objective suffix is used with the verb, as follows :—

Lau oi itamu,	I look at you.
Oi lau itagu,	You look at me.
Ia ai itamai,	He looks at us (exclusive).
Ai ia itaia,	We look at him.
Ia ita itada,	He looks at us (inclusive).
Ita umui itamui,	We look at you.
Oi idia itadia,	Look (thou) at them.

PASSIVES.

are expressed as above by the objective suffix, as

Oi lau itagu, I am looked at by you.

Also by the auxiliary verb to give, henia, with suffix,

Badu lau henigu, Literally anger is given to me, i.e., I am hated.

There is no distinctive form or termination for the passive.

6. ADVERBS.

There is nothing in the form of adverbs to distinguish them from adjectives. Almost every adjective can be used as an adverb.

iniseni,	here.	edeseni,	where ?
unuseni,	there.	dohore,	presently.
harī,	now.	haragaharaga,	quickly.
i o, oibe,	yes.	edeheto,	how ?
lasi,	no.	initomaia,	thus.
edana negai,	when	iniheto,	thus.

&c., &c., &c.

7. PREPOSITIONS.

amo,	from.	unukā,	beyond.
lalo,	within.	inikā,	on this side.
muri,	without.	vaira,	in front.
atai,	above.	madi be,	on account of,
henuai,	below.

&c., &c., &c.

8. CONJUNCTIONS.

mai,	and.	garina,	lest.
ā,	but.	ida,	together with,
danu,	also.		&c., &c., &c.

9. INTERJECTIONS.

ināi,	Oh! exclamation of wonder.
inā,	Oh! exclamation of dissent or reproof.
lau dahakai nado,	exclamation of indignation.
hī,	pish! get out!
	&c., &c., &c.

SYNTAX.

Much that belongs properly to the syntax has been already stated under the different parts of speech. The following notes on the order of words in a sentence, &c., will complete it.

The noun or pronoun in the nominative case usually precedes the verb, as, Mero vata heau, The boy runs. Ia bainema, He will come. With verbs active, the agent is always put first, and the subject acted upon next, followed by the verb, as, Lau ia dadabaia, I he beat him, that is, I beat him. Ia natuna lau hadikagu, He his child I abused me.

Observe the suffix agreeing with the object is always added to the verb. In the above examples, Lau ia dadabaia, I he beat him. Ia natuna, his child, lau, I, hadika-gu, abused me. The suffix to a noun requires its corresponding pronoun to precede it, as, Lau imagu, I hand my, my hand. Idia matadia vata hapapadia, their eyes them were opened them. Also in such sentences as these, Hanua taudia idia edia rumadia, Village men their houses them. Mero idia tohu baine henidia, Boy they sugarcane will give them.

The genitive of material is made by putting the two nouns together, and suffixing na to the qualified noun, as, biri rumana, palm leaf house his, a palm leaf house. The plural takes dia, as nara vanagidia, cedar canoes theirs. Also nouns signifying the use to which a thing is applied, as, Kohu rumana, goods house his,—a store-house. Ira segea gauna, hatchet sharpen thing, a hatchet sharpener.

Hani the sign of a question is always put last in the sentence. Mero vata gorere hani? The boy ill is? It is like the English Eh? A pause is made before hani. A question is often indicated by tone of the voice solely.

A peculiar idiom is used to express on account of. Ia bigu baduna badu, he bananas anger [is] angry, i.e., he is angry on account of the bananas. Idia boroma garidia gadi, They pigs their fear [are] afraid. They are afraid because of the pigs. Oi lau garigu gari, Thou I fear my [art] afraid. You are afraid of me. Mero hitolo taina tāi, Boy hunger crying his cries, i.e., the boy cries from hunger.

The negative is put between the two nouns, as, Umui idia gaudia basi o gari, You they fear their do not fear, i.e., do not be afraid of them.

The personal pronoun and its noun must agree in person. A pronoun of the singular number cannot take a noun with a plural suffix. When in English we should say "my eyes," in Motuan it is "my eye" only, two must be added to make it dual, as, Lau matagu rua. "My children" will be Lau natu-gu. If plural has to be expressed particularly, a noun of multitude will be added, as, verina the company, or logora all.
