HISTORY

OF THE

RISE AND PROGRESS OF BIRMINGHAM.

---

* * * "Thou pride of modern days,
To thee the muse attunes her votive praise;
Thou from whose sons new wonders daily spring,
Whose fame o'er earth is ever on the wing."

THE good old town of Birmingham resembles nothing so much as one of those persons who, after attaining celebrity of some kind, no matter what, are submitted to the public gaze through the medium of portraits for which they never sat, and the faithfulness of which they would decline to acknowledge. The epithets "ugly," "smoky," and "dismal," have been lavished upon it in indiscriminate profusion, and it seems to be high time that an appeal was entered against such sweeping judgments. Though it may not present any of those outward attractions which arrest the attention of the passing tourist, or which the fashionable denizen of Belgravia considers essential to an occasional place of resort, it nevertheless offers to those who are disposed to penetrate beneath the surface of things, abundant matter to interest and occupy the thoughtful observer. In nearly every house in England, as has been correctly observed, there is in use, at almost every hour of the day, some article or other of Birmingham manufacture. It is undoubtedly true as a general rule, that our busy hives of manufacturing industry, of which this is one of the most conspicuous, are not the most inviting spots in the world for the holiday pleasure seeker, and that their atmosphere is not invitingly salubrious; for they have urgent work to do, which precludes the indulgence of a more than slight and desultory consideration of abstract and conventional beauties. But there are exceptions to all rules; and the implicit adoption of disparaging terms in description of such localities, however frequent the practice may be, betokens neither wisdom nor intelligence on the part of those who aim, by such means, at the establishment of a reputation for refined taste. Birmingham has received more than its full share of this indiscriminate condemnation. Judged by any fair standard of comparison, it may justly claim the credit of being one of the most, if not the most, cheerful looking and agreeable centres of wealth-creating skill and labour to be met with either in Great Britain or elsewhere. And we may go a step further. It is in a position not only to advance pretensions to notice of a negative but also of a positive kind—not alone to insist upon its exemption from most of those features which unpleasantly characterize the busy seats of trade and commerce, but to fall back on its own intrinsic merits. To assert the aspect of Birmingham is grand or imposing, would be simply to utter an absurdity; but it may without exaggeration be pronounced good-looking. Various causes have contributed to this result. From the inequalities of the surface of the ground on which it is built, many of the streets are placed upon such declivities, as largely conduce, with the dry and porous nature of the subsoil, to the drainage, cleanliness, and consequent health of the town. Of these natural advantages the Corporation have availed themselves in a manner which has been highly creditable to themselves and beneficial to the community whose interests have been confined to their keeping. The width of the thoroughfares in the modern parts of Birmingham is one of the most commendable features in the arrangements of the old commissioners under the Street Act, who have also shown a laudable desire to add to the appearance of the place by the erection of handsome and useful public buildings, amongst which the Town Hall, Market Hall, and other edifices, must be included. The well-directed and successful efforts of the same body to get rid of those dense volumes of smoke, which are generally regarded as the inevitable accompaniments of manufacturing operations on an extensive scale, have also aided in no small degree the attainment of that superiority which may be fairly claimed for this over most other populous localities. No other town of the same dimensions in the United Kingdom can boast of two such noble buildings as the Town Hall and the Grammar School; and a considerable portion of the street architecture is above the average of what is found elsewhere. Still it is almost needless to add that its external appearance does not constitute the only or the principal matter of interest to the stranger, which has to be sought for among the countless productions, from a steam engine to a steel pen, of its industrious and ingenious artisans. In this respect the town is placed beyond the reach of successful rivalry. It is always difficult, says the writer already quoted (in that excellent work, The Land we Live in), to trace exactly the circumstances which led to the establishment of a particular manufacture in a particular town; but they are generally to be sought for in some natural features of the district. The contiguity of the town to what has been not inaptly termed the "black country," with its abundant supplies of iron and coal, will sufficiently account for its having become the seat of various branches of trade; but, looking at its manifold contributions to the commerce of the world, and the varied nature of the raw materials out of which they are fabricated, the sources of the extended and still extending importance to Birmingham in a manufacturing point of view, must be explained on other grounds than those indicated in the foregoing quotation. But such an inquiry would extend beyond the limits of the present brief sketch, which is designed only to exhibit to casual inspection the condition of the town at the present day. Its position in the map of the country, with the early construction of navigable canals in various directions, and in recent years the rapid development of the wonder-working railway system, in the benefits of which it has extensively participated, have, no doubt, powerfully contributed to its improvement.

Birmingham is situated very nearly in the centre of England, and has been properly described as occupying a narrow peninsular projection of the north-western portion of the county of Warwick, being bounded on the north and south by the counties of Stafford and Worcester. Mr. Horton, in his introductory remarks to the poem of Birmingham, gives the following brief and interesting sketch of its history. "The town of Birmingham is said to be of very ancient origin, though I think it will hardly compare in this respect to some other towns even in its own neighbourhood; for such was its insignificance at one time, that we are told a letter would scarcely find it unless addressed as situated near to some other better known, because longer established, cities; as, for instance, Walsall, King's Norton, &c. Some curious antiquaries, judging from old accumulations of scoria and traces of abandoned coalpits in the neighbourhood, have fixed upon Birmingham as the precise spot where the iron of the district was converted into "scythes fastened to chariots," and other warlike implements, described by Cæsar in his relation of the invasion of Britain by the Romans. This, however, is but a supposition, which is not at all strengthened by the fact which they adduce in its support, viz., that the soil in every direction is underlaid by beds of coal, seeing that the art of smelting iron by coal was not discovered until the reign of James I. The quaint and sagacious historian, Mr. Hutton, has also taken a deal of pains to connect Birmingham with a remote antiquity, but I do not think he is borne out by facts. Unable to trace, by any authentic record, the existence of the present trade of the locality prior to the sixteenth century, he indulges in an amusing series of conjectures—surmising that the aboriginal inhabitants of Britain may have defended themselves against the Roman conquerors with the aid of weapons forged at Birmingham. It is true that the neighbouring iron mines of Staffordshire were worked at a very early period, and that the local and geological characteristics of its site peculiarly adapted Birmingham for smelting ore; but the enthusiasm and ingenuity of Hutton must fail to establish all his suppositions, in the absence of written testimony either in our copious national records or other sources. All we know is, that the place described as "Bermengeham" in the Domesday Survey is not at all specially distinguished in that venerable compilation; that from the time of the Heptarchy to the time of Henry VIII., the manor belonged to the family of De Bermingham; that the privilege of a weekly market was conferred upon the town before the Norman Conquest; and that as early as the twelfth century it had acquired some celebrity in the tanning of leather—a trade for which it continued subsequently famous, though it has now been long extinct as a characteristic of the place. St. Martin's Church is the only conspicuous vestige of antiquity left to us; and though confessedly a very ancient edifice, I cannot allow it to have been in existence much more than half the time claimed for it by Mr. Hutton. But this of course is mere matter of opinion, which can never be satisfactorily settled. We have no definite authority to appeal to, farther back than Leland, who lived in the time of Henry VIII., and who describes Birmingham as inhabited by smiths "who made knives and all sorts of cutting tools—by lorimers that make bittes, and a great many nailours." Camden describes "Bremecham" as full of inhabitants, and "echoing with forges," and adds that most of the inhabitants be "smiths;" so that the existence of even an extensive local manufacture, as early as the sixteenth century, is unquestionable. We are told indeed, that when William the Conqueror got possession of the crown, Birmingham was subject to Fitz-Ausculf, whose seat was the Castle of Dudley. This man, who was a follower of the King of Normandy, no doubt took forcible possession of all he could lay his hands on. The village of Birmingham, if it could be said to have had an existence, would not be accounted of much worth. It is, however, doubtless of Saxon origin, as its name appears to denote. In process of time it got into the hands of the De Berminghams (supposed to be an Irish family), who resided at the castle, surrounded by a moat (of neither of which is any trace left), within bow shot south-west of the church, until the time of Henry VI., when Edward De Bermingham, the last of that ancient family, was tricked out of his possession by an artifice of John Dudley, a favourite of the king, afterwards Earl of Warwick and Duke of Northumberland. It is some satisfaction to know that justice at last overtook this titled villain: he was attainted and beheaded in the reign of Mary, and his ill-gotten estates forfeited to the crown.

"Birmingham," says Macaulay, "had not been thought of sufficient importance to send a member to Oliver's Parliament; yet the manufacturers of Birmingham were already a busy and thriving race. They boasted that their hardware was highly esteemed, not indeed as now at Pekin and Lima, at Bokhara and Timbuctoo, but in London, and even as far as Ireland. They had acquired a less honourable renown as coiners of bad money. In allusion to their spurious groats, the Tory party had fixed on demagogues who hypocritically affected zeal against Popery, the nickname of 'Birminghams.' Yet, in 1685, the population, which is now two hundred thousand, did not amount to four thousand." "A century and a half ago," says Hutton, "Birmingham, the grand toy-shop of Europe, was an insignificant market town, whose inhabitants never experienced the emanations of royal favour." This was perhaps owing to the decided part they took in favour of the Protector in the Civil War between Charles I. and his Parliament (for whose army they made swords), and their hostility to Prince Rupert, who, irritated by their harassing but hopeless resistance, set fire to the town, burning eighty houses, and levied a heavy fine upon the inhabitants, occasioning a loss of £30,000. Before this time, Birmingham, engaged in her various employments, maintained a strict neutrality in all the civil commotions that for centuries embroiled this unhappy land. The scanty population of the three streets of Birmingham was almost destroyed by the great plague of 1665. This, and other calamities, sadly retarded her prosperity. After the restoration, she appears to have resumed her business habits; and whether she was loyal or not, she prospered rapidly from that period. The luxurious frivolities of French taste, introduced during the reign of Charles II., were highly advantageous to Birmingham. The brass toy trade, in which the town has ever since been unsurpassed, was established for the production of glittering trifles in the shape of pouncets, pomandus, tags, étui cases, and other appurtenances of personal vanity. I have often thought (Mr. Horton continues) it must have been a beautiful little town about the time we are speaking of—Digbeth would form its principal street, and as you approached the old church, up its ascent, a delightful scene would reveal itself. There would be all the variety of hill and vale, wood and water. The old moat on the left would be seen, with some remains of the castle; still farther, in the same direction, would rise the parsonage house, embowered in foliage; and the top of the hill, called the Bull Ring, would command an extensive amphitheatre of pastoral scenery. From the time to which we have referred, to the present, the trade of Birmingham has steadily increased. William III., was, perhaps, its greatest benefactor, in introducing two important, though widely different articles of production, namely—guns and buckles. Lamenting the necessity of procuring the former from Holland, his majesty was induced by a patriotic representation from Warwickshire (Sir R. Newdegate) to give a Birmingham manufacturer a commission, which laid the foundation of the local gun trade. "The revolution," says Hutton, "was remarkable for the introduction of William, of liberty, and of the minute buckle, not differing much in size and shape from the common horse bean. This offspring of fancy, like the clouds, is ever changing: the fashion of to-day is thrown into the casting pot of to-morrow. The buckle seems to have undergone every figure, size, and shape of geometrical invention; it has passed through every form in the whole zodiac of Euclid. The large square buckle is the ton of the present day. The ladies have also adopted the reigning taste: it is difficult to discover their beautiful white feet, covered with an enormous buckle, and we wonder to see the active motion under the massive load. Thus the British fair support the Birmingham manufacturings—and thus they kill by weight of metal."

Bishop Gibson in his additions to Camden, in 1772, mentions, besides the smiths "noticed by the latter, other artificers in iron and steel, whose performances were greatly admired both at home and abroad." Although the trade of Birmingham had given ample promise of future consequence about the time when Hutton published his history (1781), yet even he, sanguine as he was in his predictions, could not have anticipated its present greatness: much of this is due to the general progress of the country, its improved means of transit, and other similar causes; but we must not overlook the efforts of such men as Boulton, Watt, John Taylor, Baskerville, Eginton, Murdock, Hardman, Thomason, Priestly, and many more—the local aristocracy of talent at the close of the last century, who have been well seconded by the manufacturers of the present day.

There is nothing in the later history of Birmingham to which it is necessary to advert, except, perhaps, the riots of 1791; the establishment of the political union (in 1831), which gained the Reform Bill; and the chartist riots of 1839, which resulted in the organization of an efficient but expensive police force.

The town only assumed her great national importance within the last fifty years, during which time her trade and population have more than quadrupled themselves. The entire aspect, as well of the suburbs as of the town, has entirely changed; more than a hundred miles of streets have stretched out into the fields and gardens in every direction. Fifty thousand houses, and 250,000 inhabitants are now gathered round the "one street going up a hill" of Leland; and countless factories with their tall chimneys and puffing steam engines, each surrounded by its little industrial army, are busy and toiling incessantly to supply every nook and corner of the world with the necessaries and luxuries of civilized life. While thus engaged in providing the appliances of comfort and convenience to others, Birmingham has not been unmindful of the requirements of her own population. She is now a borough, sending two members to Parliament—an incorporated city, with mayor, aldermen, and town councillors. She covers a larger area than any other town in the united kingdom, except the great metropolis. New buildings and new institutions have risen up to meet the demands for increased knowledge and intellectual culture; handsome churches, on noble sites, now surround the "one paroch church" of the old chronicler; and although there is much more to be done in this direction, care has been taken that the means of reasonable recreation shall not be wanting to the tens of thousands of her artificers of both sexes, let loose from toil at an early hour in the evening. As an index of the progress made in her manufacturing importance, no better test can be found than the progressive increase of her population. In 1781, this was estimated at about 25,000; in 1831, this number was augmented to 120,000; in 1841, to 182,894; and at the last census, 1851, to 202,634. The products of her industry are exported to every part of the civilized globe—and her claims to notice were sufficiently acknowledged in the late "Exhibition of all Nations." She is rapidly becoming the great centre of railroads; and now, like some of her own children who have suddenly risen to wealth and distinction, and whose origin may be considered questionable, she is busy in beautifying her appearance, and ridding herself of all traces of her original poverty and obscurity.

"The progress of Birmingham," says one of our local papers, "in population and extent, within the last fifty years, is remarkable; resembling not that of an old town in an old land, but the mushroom cities of the new world—the almost fabulous wonders of Australia and America. And this increase continues. A return of the building plans, registered according to the act, from January, 1852, to July, 1853, a period of eighteen months, shows the following results:

Houses	5050	Sets of offices	3
Chapels	5	Flour mills	2
Schools	3	Saw mill	1
Warehouses and Manufactories	70	Foundries	3
Malthouses	4	Sets of shopping	52
Stables	8	New shop fronts	80
Retail shops, &c.	369	Alterations and additions	80

"But in addition to this must be noted the hundreds of erections springing up on every side beyond the limits of the borough, which are connecting the town, by vast wildernesses of brick and mortar, with the agricultural districts of Worcestershire and Warwickshire on the one hand, and the great mining and manufacturing communities on the other. Little more than a century ago, the whole of Birmingham did not contain 4,000 houses—the growth of many ages, dating back to before the conquest; now, they add nearly that number to the 50,000 already existing, in the course of little more than twelve months." The local historian, speaking of Birmingham in his own time, seems to have foreseen the greatness she was destined to attain in ours; he says:

"Though we have attended her through so immense a space, we have only seen her in her infancy. Comparatively small in her size, homely in her person, and coarse in her dress. Her ornaments wholly of iron, from her own forge. But now her growth will be amazing, her expansion rapid, perhaps not to be paralleled in history. We shall see her rise in all the beauty of youth, of grace, of elegance, and attract the notice of the commercial world. She will also add to her iron ornaments the lustre of every metal that the whole earth can produce—with all their illustrious compounds heightened by fancy and garnished with jewels. She will draw from the fossil and the vegetable kingdoms; press the ocean for shell, skin, and coral. She will also tax the animal for horn, bone, and ivory; and she will decorate the whole with touches of her pencil." When we come to notice the manufactories, it will be seen how literally the above remarkable prophecy has been fulfilled; another exemplification of that rare foresight which invariably accompanies the gift of genius.

Just before Hutton published his history, steam power had begun to be employed in manufacture. From 1780 to 1815, only 42 engines were in operation; from 1815 to 1830, there were 178; the addition to this number between 1830 and 1838 being 120. In January 1839, 246 engines, of 3,436 horse-power, were at work. The estimated daily consumption of coals was 240 tons. No official statement of the case at the present time is available, but a competent authority gives the following particulars, derived from personal observation, as a close approximation to the truth; engines, 409; horse-power, 5,775; boilers, 475; and chimneys, 379. The writer of this sketch is unable to state the consumption of fuel, but it may be useful to add that it has not kept pace with the extended employment of steam power—a result which is owing to the general employment, within the last few years, of different kinds of apparatus for the prevention of what is justly termed the "smoke nuisance." In this respect Birmingham has set an example which may be advantageously followed in other manufacturing towns.

The appearance of Birmingham has been described as that of a place suddenly and greatly improved.

Masses of old and unsightly buildings have been swept away by the railways, which are carried through the town in all directions.

The Great Central Station, in New Street, occupies a kind of valley which previously formed a receptacle for all the squalor and vice of the town. In fact it was a second St. Giles's—that has been all cleared away by the strong and renovating hand of railway enterprise, and the Borough Improvement Act transferring to the Town Council the powers of the various local boards, for lighting, cleansing, paving, and other purposes, will tend, by the consolidation of various conflicting authorities in the hands of one central body, to facilitate the good government, sanitary progress, and general improvement of the borough.

In a moral and social point of view, Birmingham may challenge a comparison with other large towns; and although, in by-gone times, it may have been unfavourably distinguished by its lawless bigotry and intolerance, there is probably no place, at the present day, in which the various religious denominations more readily or cordially unite on the broad basis of a common Christianity for the accomplishment of philanthropic objects, where no sacrifice of principle is involved. To this is no doubt owing the liberal scale on which the many charitable institutions—one of its most honourable characteristics—is conducted. And the provision made by endowment, by organized effort, and by individual benevolence, for the secular, moral, and religious instruction of the rising generation, is also deserving of favourable mention. Few, if any, who are desirous of education for themselves or children, are without opportunities of obtaining it on convenient terms. For many years, as is well known, Birmingham has enjoyed the preëminence, meritorious or otherwise, according to particular predilections, for the extreme liberality of the political opinions which the bulk of its inhabitants have maintained; but latterly, though still to a certain extent taking the lead in public affairs, its importance in this respect is diminished by the position which Manchester has assumed as a normal school of political agitation.

Birmingham has not been the scene of any important historical events, nor does it contain much to interest the passing archæologist. Its interest and importance are those of to-day, and spring out of the operations of its almost exhaustless manufacturing ingenuity.

It is situated on the new red sandstone, a stratum which is very deficient in organic remains, but is always found to be very conducive to health: hence, when the cholera was ravaging Wolverhampton, Bilston, Tipton, and the neighbourhood, which are built on the coal strata, and Walsall and Dudley, which are on the silurian, Birmingham remained free from its devastation.

As confirmatory of the view we have taken in reference to the healthy situation of the town, we extract the following passages from a Review of the Registrar General's Quarterly Returns for 1853, contained in the Abstract of Medical Science for 1854, by John Webster, M.D., F.R.S., from which it will be seen that, medically considered, Birmingham is more healthy than the sea coast:

"Reviewing the various points now brought under notice, and supported by the observations of many investigators, it may be asserted with confidence that the rate of mortality ranges on an average higher the nearer we approach towards the sea shore, than throughout the interior districts of Britain, especially amongst town populations. This remark applies especially to such places as Dover, Brighton, Southampton, and Exeter on the south, to Hull and Sunderland on the east, as also to Liverpool on the west coast; when compared with equally crowded communities, resident in the Middlesex part of London, or in Leeds, but particularly in reference to Birmingham, which is situated about the centre of England, considerably above the sea level, and at a distance from all marine influence. In the places first named, the aggregate number of deaths, in proportion to the number of the population, is always greater than in the latter. Indeed Birmingham may be justly considered as the most healthy locality of England, speaking comparatively. Cholera has never been epidemic in this town; typhus is always a very rare disease; and although scarlatina proved rather prevalent last autumn, this seemed almost an exception to its general salubrity. Notwithstanding the smoke, sometimes overcrowded dwellings, and the laborious occupations followed by great numbers of people, this district appears remarkably healthy; whilst the rate of mortality ranges generally lower than in any other populous locality with which I am acquainted."

In 1849 the death-rate for the parish of Birmingham was 23.26 per 1000; the parish of Aston, 19.61; the parish of Edgbaston, 11.80. In 1853-4, the death-rate was, parish of Birmingham, 30.84 per 1000; Aston, nearly 27; Edgbaston, including King's Norton, 23.26. The weekly average of deaths in the entire borough being about 122.—Medical Officer's Report.

THE MANUFACTURES OF BIRMINGHAM.

Birmingham deals chiefly with the adaptation of metals to purposes of utility; this was the commencement of her greatness, and forms still her staple; but there are innumerable other manufactures carried on here into which metals either do not enter, or of which they form only a very small portion. Under this head may be classed the various descriptions of Florentine and Covered Buttons, and Papier Mâché, the latter of which is nowhere produced so well, or in such large quantities, as in Birmingham. In the infinity of metal goods might be enumerated almost everything that is in common or occasional use; everything that is employed for manufacturing or domestic purposes; all that is ornamental or merely useful. Without Birmingham the world would lose half its conveniences; for the town extends its influence everywhere. Take up anything that has any metal work about it, and Birmingham stares you in the face immediately. Hence you obtain the fastenings of your doors, your fireirons and fenders, your iron hothouses, your guns and swords; hence come your coat buttons, your umbrella frames, the pens with which you write, and most likely the seal with which you stamp your letters. Are you a votary of Bacchus? Birmingham furnishes you with silver drinking cups and pewter mugs. Of Venus? From us you obtain your wedding ring. For the splendour of your personal appearance you are indebted to Birmingham: for though you might have purchased the ring, or brooch, or key in London, it is very probable that it first saw the light in Birmingham. Are you a traveller? Birmingham furnished the coach springs that bear you up, or the railway wheels that roll you forward, or the engines by which your steam boat ploughs the ocean in defiance of wind or tide; and were it not that Birmingham supplied her with a sheeting of copper or "mixed metal," she would not long bear you safely on the treacherous main. Wherever you are, in lands civilized or savage, you find some traces of our good old town: a Red Indian favours you with a shot from a Birmingham rifle; an Egyptian pacha has your pillau served on Birmingham paper or silver trays; the Chinese boils your rice in a Birmingham saucepan; and the devout cicerone to a Belgian church offers you a medal of the blessed virgin, bran new from the warehouse of a Birmingham die sinker. Nay, there is an instance on record, that a traveller in the middle of the Great Desert had gravely handed to him, in the tent of an Arabian chieftain, a huge metal spoon, with BIRMINGHAM legibly stamped upon its back.

Guns form, in the aggregate, a most important branch of manufacture. We say in the aggregate, because it is a rare case that a gun is produced entirely by one manufacturer. There is, generally, the stock maker, the barrel maker, the lock maker, the polisher, the finisher, the engraver, the prover, and, finally, the fitter. Some of these branches are, and always have been, separate trades; but they are much more united now than they formerly were. During the last continental war it was calculated that, on the average of the year, a gun a minute was made in Birmingham; but that number was, of course, materially diminished on the establishment of peace.

The following amusing account of the state of the gun trade during the last war will be read with interest:

"The war spirit met men on every side, even in trade. Army clothiers and military booksellers became separate establishments, even in Birmingham. The fabrication of the implements of war kept the place in one perpetual stir. Sometimes all the night through —summer and winter—weekday and Sunday—twinkling workshop casements would wink their big red eyes at you. The chorus to the chimes at midnight and the church-going bells, was the merry ring of the hammer and the anvil; the sound of whirling wheels coming out through gleaming windows; the dull, thundering rumble of the metal rolling mills; the hoarse rushing dash, and the hissing showers of sparks, glittering in torrents from the open doors into the streets, of the gun barrel and sword blade grinders. Birmingham then supplied all the British army, the militia, and volunteers, the fencibles, and the East India Company, and some of our continental allies, with swords and guns. What they did in those days—those toiling, hard-handed, active workers of Birmingham—the Chancellor of the Exchequer told, on the 29th April, 1817, when the war was ended and done:

"'During the war,' he said, 'no less than three millions of small arms have been manufactured for the use of the allies, independently of those provided for the English army.'

"At what cost, Mr. R. Ward stated to the Commons. 'No less than £4,500,000 have been expended in the town of Birmingham for arms since the commencement of the war.'

"But we can appreciate the details of these results—those of us who lived in those days. Bits of guns were running through the streets at all hours of the day and night. Barrows with bundles of stocks, dirty lads with aprons of locks, hand-carts of barrels jingling along at full speed, hurrying past one everywhere. How they were ever to meet in their diverse and eccentric courses, and become a gun, would have puzzled anybody who did not know the minute sub-division of the trade, which had, we are told, in that day, 125 different branches; to any of which an apprentice could be put. And their swords and bayonets were met very often—dull, cold, leaden-looking things—on their way to the mill. But the guns formed the great trade; and here is the statement of part of what they did in the way of gun barrels:

Years.	Muskets.	Rifles.	Carbines.	Pistols.	Total in each year.

But to this they added, for the same period, 2,879,203 locks; and turned out 1,743,382 complete arms, besides 1,000,000 for the East India Company, and some 500,000 or 600,000 trade guns. The Russians sent to us from St. Petersburgh, in 1806, asking for contracts for 20,000 stand of arms, which, however, were never completed.

A return has been laid before Parliament of the number of guns and pistols proved for the last ten years at the Government Proof House, Birmingham, and at the Birmingham Proof House, Banbury Street. It is interesting at the present moment, as showing the capabilities of the manufacturers in this locality to supply our troops, and to meet the requirements of a state of warfare.

Thus it will be observed that in a time of profound peace, with no other impetus to manufacture than the ordinary demands of trade, no less than three millions and a quarter stand of arms have been produced in Birmingham alone in ten years. In the same period there passed through the London Proof House little more than one million of all kinds, of which 924,854 were guns, 73,033 were pistols, and 22,703 revolvers.

The manufacture of rifles is also deserving of notice.

Immediately connected with gun making, are two manufactures—those of SWORDS and PERCUSSION CAPS. Sword making is of several descriptions, and includes the fancy and dress swords, sabres, cutlasses, presentation swords, and matchets. Birmingham prides herself upon the excellent character of her work. In the manufacture of swords we still excel the foreigners. If due regard be paid to quality as well as price, Birmingham has no equal. The same remark will apply to other military weapons.

The making of steel hilts is occasionally so minute that a workman has been employed on a single hilt for three months at a stretch. The making of sheaths is frequently a separate branch of trade from sword making. Steel sheaths are made by bending thin plates round a mandril; the better kind of leather sheaths are frequently superbly ornamented.

With guns and swords we may fairly class PERCUSSION CAPS, which are made in Birmingham in great quantities.

Caps fitted for every possible size and variety of firearms, from those used in the smallest nipple, up to those required for arms of the largest calibre, may be seen in the show-rooms of percussion cap makers. The largest houses manufacture about a million of caps per month. Foreigners are far behind us in this article, and likely to be, if the specimens of French and Belgic caps in the Great Exhibition of 1851 be the test.

Birmingham has long been celebrated, though in a less degree than Sheffield, for works in Britannia metal, German silver, albata, argentine, and other materials imitating, and in appearance nearly resembling, silver. The latter metal is also extensively used in the local manufacture of pencil cases, thimbles, and other small articles, as well as in plating spoons, forks, salvers, &c., of copper and white metal. For the latter purpose, 15,000 ounces of silver were used in Birmingham, in the year 1846. In the establishments of Messrs. Elkington and Co., Collis, Hardman, Gough, and some others, silver plate is constantly produced. There are in all more than fifty silversmiths in the town; and the total quantity of silver annually used in different branches of art and manufacture exceeds 150,000 ounces; one manufacturer having melted 34,000 ounces in trinkets, for his own consumption in one year.

PAPIER MACHE WORKS.—Few of the Birmingham manufacturers exercise a more important influence on the taste of the kingdom than those persons engaged in producing PAPIER MACHE; and few branches of manufacture in any place have made such rapid advances. Originally the trade was confined to making trays and other articles that only presented a flat surface and straight lines; but gradually the inventive principle developed itself, and expanded the manufacture into one embracing nearly every article of furniture and decoration, however intricate its shape, or recondite its ornament. Sofas, chairs, tables, work boxes, tea caddies, book covers, vases, and a thousand other articles, are now fashioned out of this fragile material, and to any one who places one of the square trays made by old Clay, the inventor, beside a magnificent lounging chair—the former plain black, the latter revelling in all the glories of colour—the contrast is indeed striking.

Besides the ordinary kind of papier mâché, there are other branches in which the paper is treated in the most gorgeous style of ornament—in glass inlaid panels, and the inlaying of gems. The processes are, of course, secret ones, or secured by patent, and we can, therefore, only thus cursorily remark on the richness of the appearance presented by articles so ornamented, and the beauty of the designs wrought out.

STEEL PENS.—From Papier Mâché we pass to Steel Pens, which, though not, we believe, invented in Birmingham, have been brought to the greatest perfection here, and are produced in larger quantities than in any other place. Although steel pens only came into use about 1821, the trade now employs more than 2,000 persons in Birmingham alone, and a thousand millions of pens are supposed to be produced annually. The manufacture is an interesting one, as showing the vast gain derivable from the association of mechanical force with hand labour.

The recent Great Exhibition demonstrated the ingenuity of the Birmingham pen makers, who contributed to it every variety and size of pen, from the monster more than two feet long, and weighing five pounds, down to the Lilliputian things not a quarter of an inch long, and requiring a gross to weigh fourteen grains.

THE BUTTON TRADE.—The rise, progress, and present excellence of the manufacture of buttons would form an appropriate introduction to the metalliferous art of Birmingham, as it has long formed one of the staple productions of her busy and prolific hive.

The fabrication of the gilt button preceded that of the covered, or Florentine, as it is technically called, and required a considerable amount of ingenuity to keep pace with the adaptation of tastes which, the caprices of fashion are ever and anon in the process of generating; but a greater amount of ingenuity was evoked when the covered button came into general use, as the old method of covering bone moulds by the hand, with a needle and thread, was superseded by the use of dies and the screw press. The latter process not only effected a complete change in the manufacture of covered buttons, but it materially enlarged its power, both in the variety and extent of its production. The first patent taken out for making covered buttons by dies and pressure stands in the name of Mr. B. Sanders, who removed from Birmingham to Bromsgrove, in order that he might conceal the process from the prying eye of his manufacturing contemporaries; but as he soldered iron shanks to the back of his covered buttons, it was some time before the public became reconciled to them, from the general dislike to that form of shank. On the expiration of his patent, in 1823, Mr. Sanders cut away the iron shank, and substituted the present flexible or woven shank, for which he attempted to establish a patent; but the objections against it were so strong that it was refused, and the flexible shank, made of catgut, had been in use fifty years preceding, the manufacturers of gilt buttons having applied it. The rejection of this patent had the effect of opening the trade to the town of Birmingham, which has since become so important, not only from the number of hands it employs, but also from the almost constant demand which it creates for ingeniously constructed machinery. Almost all the operations in button making are performed with incredible rapidity by females, and although to put together a single button fourteen pairs of hands and a number of machines are employed, a set of fourteen buttons can be sold for a penny.

The button trade is more extensive than is imagined. There are upwards of 3,000 persons engaged in the pearl button trade in the town of Birmingham, and perhaps there are 300 masters in the trade; whilst in the manufacture of cloth and metal buttons a larger number of operatives will be required. The various branches of this trade are fluctuating. The number of buttons on a coat vary, and though it may seem of little moment to an individual whether his coat should have eight buttons or six, the difference of fashion, if generally adopted, would be twenty-five per cent. The amount would be small to each individual, but to the manufacturer it would involve the loss of one-fourth of his trade. And if this be applied to a trade which occupies 5,000 or 6,000 persons in all its branches, the effects would be obvious. We little think that so small a thing as the change either in the fashion or material of a button may throw a thousand people out of employment. An argument for the button manufacturers was once given by a dignitary of the church, whose name is yet as the precious ointment poured forth, the late Reverend Bishop Wilson, of Sodor and Man, which came from the heart if not from the head. Being measured for a coat, he desired the tailor to put only a few buttons upon it. "But if every one did so," said the tailor, "the button makers would be thrown out of work." "Say you so, John?" says the Bishop, "then button it all over."

Glass Buttons are made in large pincers or plyers, which have the pattern and size let into them, and the glass being in a state of fusion it at once receives the impression. They are then burnished, and the eyes are attached by rivets. Glass seals are made in a similar manner.

Brassfoundry.—Birmingham brasswork has long been celebrated, and though, from the number of other trades carried on, it does not stand out so conspicuously as formerly, it is yet an important and staple manufacture. It is divisible into several classes, as Ornamental, Ecclesiastical, Domestic, Naval, Military, and Cabinet Brasswork. These classes are again divisible into the sections of finished and rough work; the latter being the casting as it leaves the mould; the former the work complete for fixing or use. Many brassfounders confine themselves to the rough work, which they supply wholesale or retail to the finishers. These remarks apply to brass casting, stamped brasswork being an entirely distinct trade.

What we have called Domestic Brasswork (although the name is not used among the trade) comprises brass bedsteads, balustrades, fireirons, curtain rods and bands, cornice poles, toast stands, picture frames, gas-fittings, lamps, and the thousand other articles in common use in houses. All these are produced by casting or stamping; very few, except in the finer kinds of Church Furniture, being beaten out. Bedsteads in brass and iron form an important article of manufacture, in all sizes and shapes, from the superb four-post down to the homely stump, and of all prices, from the magnificent £600 one exhibited in the Crystal Palace, down to the hospital beds at about £1 each. The pillars are either cast solid, or drawn on mandrills, as tubing.

Gas fittings are made in immense quantities by the brassfounders. These, too, are produced of widely differing qualities—some a plain brass tube; others finely gilt, and decorated with coloured glass, and with statuettes in the finest Parian. Every day, almost, produces something rich and new; and those who will take the trouble to compare the gas-fittings of ten years ago with those of to-day, will be astonished at the advance that has been made in appearance and design, without a great, if any, increase in price. With gas-fittings we may fairly class lamps, on which a vast amount of interest and wealth has been expended. All art has been ransacked for models—grotesques, mediæval, and classical shapes have been pressed into service; sphinxes, dragons, knights, trees, and flowers, have all contributed their quota; and the pure forms of Greek art, and the rich ornament of the Renaissance are freely employed by many discriminating producers; but, unhappily, the detestable scrolls and unmeaning decoration of Louis Quatorze, and the Rococo senilities of Louis Quinze, are too frequently used, and still form the staple of lamp ornaments. Glass and porcelain, delicately gilt or painted, has been much used of late for the pillars, and with very good effect.

Naval Brassfoundry comprehends all the brasswork used in ships, and requires in its production great care, so that all parts of the work may bear the strictest examination. The casting of bells is also carried on here to some extent, and with considerable success. The military work consists of sword handles, gun furniture, studs for harness and accoutrements, and the various pieces of brass forming part of a soldier's equipment. Brassfoundry being of so extensive a nature, there are numerous firms of high standing.

The Ecclesiastical work embraces every article in metal necessary for the furniture of a church, whether Anglo-Catholic or Roman Catholic. The best class of this work is beaten into its proper shape, not cast; and as it is chiefly if not entirely made by one house, Messrs. Hardman and Co., the purest mediæval forms are carefully reproduced. To those who have even slightly studied the character of mediæval art, this assertion will be equivalent to saying that the utmost delicacy and beauty characterize the articles of ecclesiastical furniture manufactured. Not only, however, are lecterns and candlesticks, coronæ, and hanging lamps, produced in brass, but glorious gates for choirs and chapels, monumental brasses, altar flower vases, antique-shaped flowing hinges, richly-wrought locks, and massive keys are also manufactured in brass and iron; and if we include the rarer metals—chalice and flagon, incense boat and crucifix, may be found in profusion; while the noble monstrance, flashing back the light from its crystal glass and gemmed star-like body—and the richly-inlaid tabernacle, on which all the treasures of decoration are lavished, for it is to contain the Body of the Lord, in the Romish sense—the emblematic crosier, the authoritative pastoral staff, the jewelled mitre, the gorgeous episcopal ring, the processional cross, and the splendid vestments loaded with gold and jewels—cope, chasuble, dalmatic—the white albe with its rich apparels—the maniple, the coloured stole—all tell us of the form of faith that was held in old England before our own church brought back the people to the simplicity of primitive times—retaining all the essentials, but throwing aside the gewgaws and finery.

"As the people of Birmingham," says KOHL, "extend their speculations over the whole world, we may see in their show-rooms articles, the utility of which is estimated only by the wild inhabitants of some distant and uncivilized land. Here, for instance, I saw some strangely fashioned money current among certain negro natives of Africa: South America and America generally, are, however, the principal customers: and the constant study of the manufacturers is to find something that may please the tastes and fancies prevalent in the other side of the Atlantic. To carry on speculations of this description, an exact knowledge of the laws regulating duties of distant countries is absolutely necessary. Thus, for instance, the import duties in Russia in all metal wares are regulated by weight, and candlesticks and other articles destined for that market are, in consequence, made hollow, and filled up after they arrive there."

ROLLING AND WIRE MILLS.—The manufacture of iron wire is an important branch of trade in Birmingham, and is now carried to a considerable extent. The iron is principally procured from the neighbourhood of Stourbridge, in bars about 20 feet long and from 1½ to 2 inches square.

Visitors interested in the manufacture of NEEDLES must visit the large manufactures of Redditch, about twelve miles from Birmingham; it may be reached by Railway from the Great Central Station in New Street.

SCREWS are produced in great abundance in Birmingham.

NAILS, and especially cut nails, are extensively manufactured.

JEWELLERY.—At the present time there are in Birmingham large concerns almost wholly occupied in making GOLD CHAINS. To produce a single gold chain of ordinary quality, and economical in cost, great power of machinery is required—in minute divisions of labour, great activity and judgment, and the utmost skill in applying it.

It has been calculated that the consumption of fine gold in Birmingham, for chains alone, amounts to no less than a thousand ounces weekly; and that more of the precious metals are consumed in her manufactures than in any other town in the kingdom, not excepting the great metropolis.

In the manufacture of a gold chain, in cheapness and quality, Birmingham has no equals on the continent, nor anywhere else. We have seen electro-silvered and electro-gold chains well coated with the precious metals, and capable of lasting some time with decent care. The first at 4½d. each, the second at 1s. 9d. The same remark will apply to PENCIL CASES and other minute articles in this branch, for which Birmingham is so celebrated. The various articles of jewellery, such as brooches, pins, &c., as produced by our townsmen, are deserving of minute attention, from the fact that the Germans are competing with us, in these productions, in the foreign markets.

GLASS MAKING, although not peculiar to Birmingham, is carried on here to an immense extent; and, like brassfoundry, is divisible into various branches; of which the principal are crown and sheet, window and plate glass, articles in domestic use, coloured glass, and painted windows. Glass is engraved and cut by means of lathes, and by the hand. It was here that the beautiful crystal fountain, that occupied so distinguished a place in the Great Exhibition, was produced. It was also here that the grand candelabra was fabricated for Ibrahim Pasha, in Egypt, intended for the tomb of the Prophet.

IT is only lately that Birmingham has started into prominence as a producer of locks.

The LAMP manufacturers of Birmingham, are a numerous and respectable class, and the production of this article is beginning to form one of the many staples of the town.

In LIGHT STEEL TOYS the principal branch was, at one time, the buckle, but that has since gone out, and we have now a great variety of fancy articles, such as watch chains, guards, and beads for purses, in all of which, however, we are beaten by the French; but in snuffers, and some other useful things in light steel toys, we still hold our preëminence.

SPOONS and FORKS form an important branch of Birmingham trade. They are cut by a press into what are called blanks, which are flat, and have the concave form imparted to them by other presses. Spoons are made in iron, Britannia metal, German silver, and silver. The richest kinds of spoons and forks are wrought by hand.

COFFIN FURNITURE, a lugubrious, but by no means an unprofitable trade, furnishes employment to a good number of workmen. The furniture is produced by stamping and forging, and many new designs are frequently registered for it; so that beauty of design is not only sought for in life, but is carried with us to the silent tomb. The manufacture of ornaments for coffins is a very important part of the trade, and it is curious to find, that even in this last concession to human vanity, there is a constant demand for new designs. Who is it that examines and compares the ornaments of one coffin with another? We never heard of the survivors of a deceased examining an undertaker's patterns; and yet, a house which consumes forty tons of cast iron per annum, for coffin handles, stated to the gentleman to whose letters we are indebted for the information—"Our travellers find it useless to show themselves with their pattern-books at an undertaker's, unless they have something tasteful, new, and uncommon. The orders for Ireland are generally for gilt furniture for coffins. The Scotch, also, are fond of gilt, and so are the people of the west of England; but the taste of the English is decidedly for black. The Welsh like a mixture of black and white. Coffin lace is formed of very light stamped metal, and is made of almost as many patterns as the ribbons of Coventry. All our designs are registered, as there is a constant piracy going on, which it is necessary to check."

The TIN-PLATE is also assuming considerable importance among the staples of the town.

The IRON FENDER trade is well and adequately represented.

DIE-SINKING is of almost universal application where raised surfaces are required, and is therefore of great importance. Still, from the difficulty of attaining a high degree of excellence, and the numerous qualities of mind, hand and eye, required to insure success, there are very few good die-sinkers.

The BELLOWS MAKING is a trade too, which, though almost confined to one establishment, has contributed to the manufacturing celebrity of the town.

STREETS AND PUBLIC EDIFICES.—Speaking of the streets in his times, Hutton says, in his History of Birmingham, "The town consists of about two hundred streets, some of which acquired their names from a variety of causes, but some from no cause, and others have not yet acquired a name." He then goes on to give the derivation of the names of the principal streets. This now would be almost an endless task, as the two hundred streets of his time must be increased to nearly five hundred.

According to an article in The Leisure Hour, published several years ago, Birmingham, since 1791, has nearly quadrupled itself in size and population: the entire aspect of the town, as well as the suburbs, is changed; more than a hundred miles of streets have stretched out in every direction. Fifty thousand houses, and 253,000 inhabitants are gathered round the "one street going up a meane hill" of Leland; and countless factories, with their tall and puffing steam engines, each surrounded by its little industrial army, are busy, and toiling incessantly, to supply every nook and corner of the world with the necessaries and luxuries of civilized life. While thus engaged in providing the appliances of comfort and convenience to others, the townsmen of Birmingham have not been unmindful of the requirements of their home population: new buildings and new institutions have risen up to meet the demand for increased knowledge and intellectual culture. Handsome churches, on noble sites, now surround the "one paroch church" of the old chronicler; and care has been taken that the means of reasonable recreation shall not be wanting to the tens of thousands of artificers, of both sexes, let loose from toil at an early hour in the evening."

We now take a brief glance at some of the public buildings most worthy of remark.

The TOWN HALL, which is situated nobly at the top of New Street (the Bond Street of Birmingham), is deservedly the most conspicuous, as it is by far the most classic and attractive in appearance. It is essentially Greek in structure and design. Upon a rusticated basement, in which are numerous doors and windows for light and entrance to the lower and domestic portion of the building, rises the body of the edifice. The hall is a peristylar composition, having rows of handsome columns along the sides and front, supporting entablatures above. These columns are of the Corinthian order, and the eight in front are surmounted by a lofty pediment. They are forty feet in height, and, standing upon a basement twenty feet above the ground, they present a magnificent appearance from various parts of the town. This erection having been reared for the express purpose of accommodating large assemblies, the main body of it is taken up by one large hall, somewhat smaller than Exeter Hall, in the Strand, but better adapted to the conveyance of sound. At one end is the celebrated organ of Hill, one of the finest in Europe, constructed at the cost of from £3,000 to £4000, and containing 4,000 pipes, which are acted on by four sets of keys. The interior of the hall is elegantly decorated: it is ornamented with fluted pilasters, with rich capitals, and with a roof of elaborate workmanship. It will accommodate 4,000 persons with seats; and at great political meetings, when the seats have been removed, as many as 10,000 at a time have there congregated together. This fine building was completed in September, 1834. It is universally admitted that the Town Hall is the pride and glory of Birmingham; not merely from the splendour of its design or its great extent, but from the associations with which it is intimately connected. It is here the splendid Musical Festivals are triennially held, which have attained to such high popularity as to be now esteemed the most successful in the kingdom. On these occasions we have the most distinguished visitors, and the whole town assumes a new and animated appearance. The organ may be heard every Thursday from one till two o'clock. There are also concerts held every Monday evening, commencing at eight o'clock. This magnificent building was erected by the street commissioners, but by the Borough Improvement Act it passes into the hands of the town council. The organ is the property of the Governors of the General Hospital, for the benefit of which institution the Musical Festivals are held.

The GRAMMAR SCHOOL, which stands in New Street, near the central railway station, is the building next in architectural importance to the Town Hall. It is built from the design of Sir Charles Barry, the architect of the new palace at Westminster, and is in the Elizabethan style. Being situated in a broad part of New Street, it is seen to great advantage from the opposite pavement, and at once strikes the stranger as an effective and imposing structure. By the expiration of leases, and other causes, the property belonging to the institution has, for many years, been rapidly rising in value, and it is only justice to the governors of the school to state that the large funds at their disposal are administered in a manner which has proved highly beneficial to the town. They have established, and now maintain, five branch schools for the education of youth of both sexes, who are educated free of all charge; and ten exhibitions of £50 per year each, tenable for four years, are open to the most meritorious pupils of the head establishment, going to Oxford or Cambridge. Numbers of those who have obtained these preferments, have carried off high honours at the Universities. The head school is divided into two departments—the classical and the commercial. It is accessible to visitors on application to the porter at the centre door.

The QUEEN'S COLLEGE, Paradise Street, possesses many attractions for strangers. The institution owes its existence to the disinterested zeal and energy of Mr. W. Sands Cox, F.R.S. It is under the direction of a council, and the course of education pursued qualifies, without any residence elsewhere, for the diplomas of the Society of Apothecaries, and the Royal Colleges of Surgeons in London and Edinburgh; and under the authority of a royal warrant, for the degrees of B.M., M.D., B.A., M.A., B.C.L., and D.C.L., to be conferred by the University of London.

The college buildings contain accommodation for upwards of one hundred resident students. The college hall, designed by Messrs. Bateman and Drury, contains many valuable paintings, as well as elegant stained glass windows, executed by Messrs. Chance. Connected with the college are museums of human and comparative anatomy, zoology, geology, and other departments of natural history. The library comprises upwards of five thousand volumes of rare and choice books. St. James's Chapel, attached to the college, was consecrated by the Lord Bishop of the Diocese in 1844. Through the unexampled munificence of the late Dr. Warneford, the college possesses the following endowments:

For Warden, £1,500; for Professor of Pastoral Theology, £4,400; for Chaplaincy of College, £1,000; for Divinity Lectures, £1,000; for Medical Tutor, £1,000; for Chaplain of Queen's Hospital, £1,000; for Warneford Prizes, £1,000; for Warneford Scholars, £1,000.

The CORN EXCHANGE, like the Market Hall, was built to meet the requirements of business. It stands in the High Street, and from the nature of the site—having to be approached through a narrow court—has no external attractions. The interior is most effectively lighted from the roof, which is vaulted and remarkably elegant. It was designed by Mr. Hemming, was erected at the moderate cost of £6,000, and was first opened for business in 1847.

The MARKET HALL, which stands on the west side of the open space of ground called the Bull Ring, is, perhaps, strictly speaking, the most useful of all the public buildings in the town. It is an enormous pile, being 365 feet in length, 108 in width, and 60 in height; it is lighted by 59 windows, and contains 600 stalls for the sale of goods and provisions. In the centre, under the clock, is a handsome fountain, the work of Messrs. Messenger and Sons; it is a very graceful design, about twenty feet in height: in the centre of a large stone basin, rises a pedestal of freestone, ornamented with groups of flowers and fruits, and with fish and game in bronze, surmounted with an admirably modelled group of figures of the same metal. A more appropriate ornament for the situation it occupies cannot well be imagined; the hall was erected to meet the wants of the population at a cost of over £67,000. It is open daily, and is generally well attended; but Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays are considered the principal market days.

The SOCIETY OF ARTISTS (of which Sir C. L. Eastlake, P.R.A., is president) hold their Annual Exhibitions of Paintings at the Athenæum Rooms in Temple Row, which usually open about the middle of autumn, and close immediately after Christmas—they are invariably of an attractive and high class character. An annual prize is awarded to the painter of the best picture contributed, by the Fine Arts Prize Fund Association. The ultimate object of the Society is to form schools of art similar to those of the Royal Academy; a life academy having already been formed, which we understand is admirably conducted, being superintended personally by the officers of the Society.

The BINGLEY EXHIBITION HALL, Broad Street, was erected in 1850, primarily for the accommodation of The Birmingham and Midland Exhibition of Fat Cattle, Sheep, Pigs, and Poultry; but its interior construction is so arranged as to admit of its being devoted to any other purpose for which extensive space is required. Its proprietary are a body distinct from the promoters of the Exhibition, who are tenants of the building only for a certain portion of each year. It encloses nearly an acre and a quarter of land, and has frontages to both King Alfred's and King Edward's Place. The vast space inside the hall is divided into five compartments, which are all admirably lighted from the roof, and ventilated in a perfect manner. The building, which was erected by Messrs. Branston and Gwyther from plans prepared by themselves, cost £6,000. The Cattle and Poultry Shows are under the management of a large and influential committee; but for the complete success which has attended them, the public are indebted mainly to the late Hon. Secretary, Mr. T. B. Wright, PUBLIC OFFICE, Moor Street.—The Quarter Sessions are held here, and a bench of Magistrates sit daily on public business. Up to a very late period, culprits for drunkenness were exposed here in the stocks.

But perhaps the most important public building is that which we have yet to notice—we allude to the GREAT CENTRAL RAILWAY STATION AND HOTEL, New Street. It makes Birmingham at once the great centre from which will radiate lines to every part of the united kingdom: and New Street will become at once the most busy and most beautiful part of the town. This edifice was commenced in January, 1852: it is in the Italian style, and consists of a centre, and right and left wings. The centre, which projects about twenty feet from the wings, is 120 feet long, and four stories in height. The lower story is composed of an arcade, divided by Doric pilasters into ten arches, and deriving richness of effect from each pilaster being flanked by piers of rusticated masonry. This story is built entirely of Derbyshire stone. The wings are only three stories high, and are of course less ornamented than the centre. The wing nearest King Edward's School, part of the centre, and the top story of the other wing, are devoted to the purposes of an hotel—"The Queen's" as it is named. The entrance is by a porch, fronting New Street.

EDUCATIONAL AND CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.—The Educational Institutions of the town have happily so multiplied of late that it is a difficult task to give even an outline within our limits of the many which present themselves in every direction.

Perhaps after the Free Grammar School (which has been already noticed) the BLUE COAT SCHOOL stands first in the order of time as well as of local importance. By a date in front of this plain and useful building, in St. Philip's Churchyard, it was erected in 1724, and considerably enlarged in 1794. It consists of about 200 scholars, of both sexes, over whom preside a governor and governess—both single. Behind the apartments is a large area, appropriated for the amusement of the children. Great decorum is preserved in this little community, who are supported by annual contributions, and by collections made after sermons twice a year.

SYDENHAM COLLEGE, St. Paul's Square, was formed on the same plan as the Queen's College, for the education of students in medicine. This College is in connection with Apothecaries' Hall and the Royal College of Surgeons, London, and under the able superintendence of leading physicians and surgeons of the town. It is entirely supported by voluntary contributions.

The MIDLAND INSTITUTE promises to become the most important educational institution in the town. It consists of two departments: one, a GENERAL DEPARTMENT; the other, SCHOOLS OF INDUSTRIAL SCIENCE. Under the former head is embraced, 1st, the Literary Branch—comprising general and reference libraries, reading rooms, accommodation as far as may be practicable for the literary societies of the town, and lectures on subjects kindred to this branch; 2nd, Museums; 3rd, A Collection of Mining Records; 4th, Lectures on General Scientific Subjects; 5th, Periodical Meetings for the reading and discussion of original communications, upon the plan of the sections of the British Association; and 6th, A Gallery of Fine Arts for the reception of the examples of painting and sculpture.

The other department is a School of Industrial Science, the members of which are provided with systematic lectures and class instruction in the various branches of science, with especial reference to their particular occupations; and also partakes of the important advantages of the General Department. The Lectures include Chemistry, as applied to the various manufactures, and Agriculture, Mechanics, Metallurgy, Mineralogy, and Geology, Ventilation of Mines, and Mining Engineering. The education of our artisans, practical miners, and others, in the scientific principles of their daily avocations thus becomes a primary object of the Institute.

The SCHOOL OF DESIGN is associated with the Institute, by which greater facilities will be afforded, and increased accommodation given for more successfully attaining its object. This enables the Council to place the building of the Society of Arts, in New Street, at the disposal of the Society of Artists, for their Annual Exhibition of Pictures, and affords them the opportunity of more completely developing their proposed educational plans.

An important feature in the Institute is its permanence. This is secured by the Act of Incorporation, which gives to the donors a guarantee for the stability of the institution to which they are invited to contribute.

The collection of Mining Records will be of peculiar value in this district, by affording information as to the position of old workings, and the situation and peculiarities of the strata in which the minerals occur.

The terms of annual membership are fixed at the lowest possible scale.

Such are the features of the Midland Institute. In carrying out this plan the promoters were greatly aided by the liberality of the Town Council, who made a grant of a site for the Institute Buildings, adjoining the Town Hall. To enable the Corporation to make a legal transfer of the land, the Committee obtained an Act of Parliament, by which, at the same time, the Institute was incorporated. The condition on which the grant of land was finally completed was that £10,000 be raised for the purpose of the building, which amount was obtained.

The GENERAL HOSPITAL, Summer Lane, was completed in 1778, and the two wings were added in 1791. It is supported by subscriptions, donations, and legacies, but its principal source of revenue is the Triennial Musical Festival, which was originally established to benefit this noble charity.

DISPENSARY, Union Street, established 1794. The present edifice erected in 1808. The cost of the building was about £3,000. Sick and midwifery patients of the poorer classes are visited at their own dwellings upon the recommendation of a subscriber. There are two resident surgeons, a dispensary apothecary, and a midwife. Vaccine inoculation is performed gratis, without recommendation, on Mondays and Thursdays.

QUEEN'S HOSPITAL, Bath Row. The project for founding this Hospital originated with Mr. Sands Cox, in 1839. The foundation stone was laid on the 18th of June, 1840. It consists of two main wings, the Victoria and Adelaide wings. It is under the immediate patronage of Her Majesty the Queen, His Royal Highness Prince Albert, and Earl Howe, the Vice President.

The suburbs of Birmingham consist of Edgbaston and Harborne (Western), Moseley (Southern side), Aston and Erdington (Northern), and Handsworth (North West). Birmingham vies with any other large town in the picturesque or sylvan beauty of its suburbs, and from some cause, not easily understood, the sanitary condition of Birmingham compels its citizens to place their families out of it; consequently most persons keep their country establishments of some sort. EDGBASTON, almost entirely belonging to the Calthorpe family, has been carefully laid out and almost exclusively occupied by the leading families, and possesses every beauty that wealth and taste can lavish upon it; but nearly the whole of Edgbaston of any value is now nearly if not quite, built over, and the teeming thousands of industrious money-making citizens are restlessly casting about for other localities of equal, or if possible superior attractions. MOSELEY, on the southern side of Birmingham is one of the loveliest of our pretty and secluded villages; and the road leading to it from the town is the finest of its noble outlets. Moseley is certainly the gem of its class, that is to say, considered as a quiet retreat from the busy hum of the hive of industry close by; this suburb lies high above the town, and the Moseley road traversing the brow of the hill, commands a fine panoramic view of Birmingham and Edgbaston on the one side, and on the other a wide range of country extending for many miles. Moseley and its precincts is remarkably healthy being also well sheltered; the purity of the atmosphere is most delightful, consequently it has been the practice for some years for the faculty to send their patients here; in fact this district performs for our borough the same function that another well known locality does for one of our Eastern possessions; it is the Simla of Birmingham while Edgbaston is its Belgravia. Fashion fickle goddess, has lately disturbed its quiet haunts by also sending its votaries here, and between the two classes (fashion and invalids), house property in this locality is at a decided premium.

The little village of HARBORNE, distant about three miles, is a pleasant one. It is very high, but cold and damp, from the churchyard an extensive view is obtained of the Clent Hills, Hagley, and the whole range of country terminating in the Lickey Hills in Worcestershire. An omnibus plys between this pleasant village and Birmingham nearly every hour throughout the day. The route to Harborne lies through the best part of Edgbaston, passing villas of the most elegant construction, belonging to wealthy Birmingham citizens, and affords agreeable views of hill and dale, in which the splendid conservatory of the Botanical Gardens, Edgbaston Church, hall, and park are conspicuous objects.

HANDSWORTH (on the north west), the famous seat of science, is an attractive locality, possessing many natural beauties, and well wooded, and, as it lies between Birmingham and the iron and coal districts, it is a favourite resort of both, consequently it is the most important and populous neighbourhood we have, possessing all that can make a suburb attractive,—wealth, good society, and every convenience of civilized life.

ERDINGTON has for some years possessed great attractions to the Birmingham citizen. It is high and well wooded, with many objects of great interest surrounding it, and when the new railway is opened will be a place of great resort and a populous locality.

THE LARGEST SIZE MADE.

FREARSON'S PATENT HOOKS AND EYES.

The objects of this invention are Neatness, Security, and Durability, effected by the following means:—

1.—NEATNESS. The HOOKS being much flatter than the ordinary kinds, they make a closer and neater fit with Eyes, and still more so with flexible Eyelet-holes or Loops.

2.—SECURITY. The HOOKS are constructed so as to slightly pinch the Eyes, flexible Eyelets or Loops, thereby preventing them from becoming unfastened, until required by the wearer.

3.—DURABILITY. The HOOKS having two extra needle-holes, they may be sewn on more firmly; and as they are not at all injured by the mangle, they will remain securely attached to the garment until it is worn out.

N.B.—No. 5 size is admirably adapted for "Looping-up" the Skirts of Ladies' Dresses.

"VICTORIA LAMP"

FOR burning all the New Hydro-Carbon Oils, from 8,00 to 8,50, such as Petrolene, Paraffin, Photogen, Belmontene, Burmese Oil, &c., with a Light superior to Gas.

This Lamp produces the Cheapest and BEST LIGHT EXTANT, and will burn in all climates.

All kinds of English and Foreign Lamps, Chandeliers, Brackets, Pendants, Coronas, Sconces, &c., in Brass, Bronze, and Electro-Plate, Wholesale and for Exportation.

TO BE HAD THROUGH ALL RESPECTABLE MERCHANTS, FACTORS, & IRONMONGERS.

The NEW PATTERN BOOK for 1860, post free for 6d.

ORIGINAL INVENTOR OF THE IMPROVED PETROLENE & PARAFFIN LAMPS.

NOTES OF NOVELTIES.—(See "The Ironmonger," May 31, 1860.) "Mr. SYSON NIBBS, of Birmingham, has forwarded for examination a New Burner for Hydro-Carbon Lamps, called the 'VICTORIA' BURNER, which he has recently patented. The Lamps are especially adapted for consuming the cheaper heavy Oils, which have not hitherto been satisfactorily burned. We have tried one of the Lamps with several Oils, varying in specific gravity from 8,00 to 8,33, and find that with the SHORT Chimney it gives an exceedingly INTENSE LIGHT, that the combustion is very perfect, and the economy great, as from the regulation for the admission of air, the Oil is not over burnt. The Burners are WELL FINISHED, and made in a STRONG, DURABLE manner, in this respect furnishing a very striking contrast to the tinselly Burners which are usually characteristic of the cheap Paraffin Lamps."

It represents a greater variety of Designs than any other hitherto published, and shows their adaptation for burning the Liquid Gas in Chandeliers, Hall-Lanterns, Table, Night, Bracket, and Cabin Lamps.

The entire component parts are manufactured on their own premises, and they are thus enabled to produce an article which, for Cheapness, Finish, and Practical Usefulness, will advantageously compare with any hitherto introduced into the Lamp Market.

The Burners are made with great care, and every appliance of skill and practical experience has been brought to perfect their manufacture. They are confidently recommended as being unequalled for developing the Brilliancy of the various Liquid Gases burnt in them.

THE NEWLY INVENTED

BALANCE PEN HOLDER.

THOS. NEWEY PATENTEE.

This Pen Holder prevents the Pen, when charged with Ink, from soiling the desk or writing paper and is most agreeably adapted to the hand of the writer.

OPINION OF THE LONDON PRESS.

"THE BALANCE PEN HOLDER.—The object of this application of the principle applied to the balance-handle knives, is to obviate the disagreeable effects resulting from laying the pen down when charged with ink, the result often being a great loss of time and labour, in consequence of the letter or document being spoiled or defaced by the pen rolling over it. These Pen Holders are handsomely finished, and admirably adapted for use. Messrs. Newey and Co. have succeeded in improving the Red Ink and other Steel Pens, some of which are in a fair way of being much sought after."—The London Commercial Record, Friday, August 19, 1859.

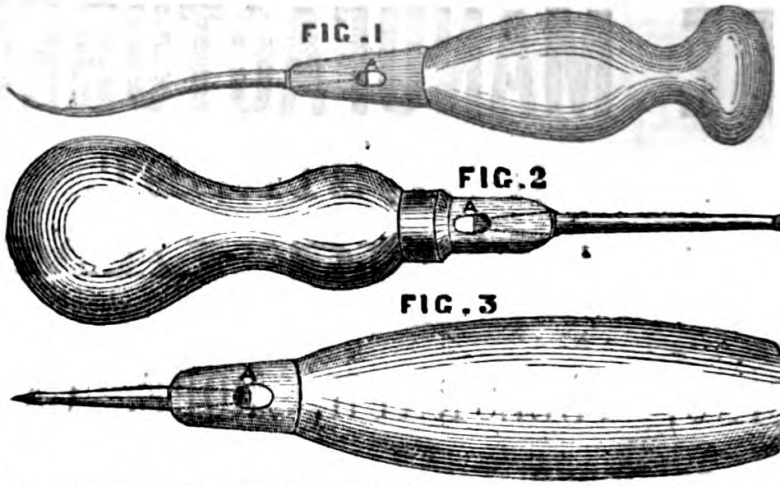
WILLIAM DAVIS'S
IMPROVED AWL



The Inventor, WILLIAM DAVIS, of 44, Lower Loveday Street, Birmingham, begs respectfully to draw the attention of the trade generally to his economic improvements in the Tangs of Awls, Awl Blades, and in the Stocks or Pads for holding the same; and as W. D. has given this matter a vast amount of study, he considers it not out of place to observe, the common defect that has hitherto been found with Awls, has been the difficulty in forging the Tangs without diminishing the strength of that important part, and the consequent great liability of their breaking at the shoulder, or junction of the Tang with the Awl, and what has hitherto proved a great difficulty, W. D. has rendered both simple and efficient in the highest degree, namely, the forming the Tang and Pad for holding Awl Blades in such a way that, while the greatest firmness is ensured in the junction, nevertheless the Awl may be removed and renewed, or replaced by another of a larger or smaller size when required, in a simple and most efficient manner, as will be readily seen from the following description :—

FIG. I. is the view of an Awl, Pad, and Handle, suitable for shoemakers; and

FIG. II. represents the like, as suitable for carpenters and joiners. In a general way three sizes of Pads and Awl Tangs will be found sufficient to hold Awls of all sizes, from the largest to the smallest. It is evident that by the insertion of a common nail, or other similar article, in the hole marked A (through which the end of the Awl Tang is seen to project,) that the Awl will be loosened, however tightly it may have been driven in, and thus a broken Awl may be removed and a fresh one supplied with the greatest ease. The tightness of course depends on the greater or less degree of taper given to the Tang, and to the Socket that receives it.

RATCLIFF AND CO.,

PATENT ELECTRO PLATERS,

Gilders, and General Depositors,

SUFFOLK STREET WORKS, BIRMINGHAM,

AND ARUNDEL STREET, SHEFFIELD.

These Works were the first established in the year 1843, for carrying out to the utmost extent the PATENTS for GALVANIC PLATING, GILDING, and GENERAL METALLIC DEPOSITIONS (for the Trade only,) and the Firm being entirely unconnected with the Manufacture of Articles of any kind, New Patterns and Inventions may be confidently entrusted to their care.

For a time it was considered that in order to obtain a substance of Silver or Gold upon Steel or Iron, it was necessary first to deposit a coating of Copper, which often failed. This object is now effected at Suffolk Street Works without the intermediate coating of Copper plating directly on the Steel or Iron, with as much ease, certainty, and effect, as upon Brass or German Silver.—SEE ART UNION JOURNAL ON SUFFOLK STREET WORKS, January, 1846, page 7.

Great improvements have taken place in the mode and perfection of electro-plating since the Works in Suffolk Street were opened to plate for the general Trade. The deposition of metals at first was very imperfect, often very rough and loose, and if smooth, very slow. A few years ago, this House, in connection with Messrs. Elkington and Co., secured by a New Patent, a method by which the Silver was deposited as bright, smooth, firm and clear, as when leaving the pot of the refiner, which has proved of great advantage to the appearance of Highly Wrought Designs, and, in reference to plainer articles, very much reduced the price and labour of finish. Much might be said and written, of a most interesting character, on the origin, nature, and progress of this beautiful invention did space permit, not only on the success by which Gold, Silver, Copper, Brass, and other Metals are deposited on Britannia Metal, Steel Pens, Carriage Furniture, and old Work restored to its original beauty, but the facility with which Works of Art, both ancient and modern, are copied, from a brooch and snuff box to waiters, shields, and statues. The art appears but yet in its infancy. We refer our readers to a group of solid deposits, by which, on the adjoining page, this branch of art is illustrated.—SEE CORNISH'S GUIDE TO BIRMINGHAM AND ITS MANUFACTORIES, 1856, page 103.

SOLID SILVER or COPPER DEPOSITS of any description undertaken from WAX, PLASTER, or METALLIC MODELS, ANTIQUE or MODERN.—SEE PLATE TO FACE THE TITLE, CORNISH'S DIRECTORY, 1861.

All Depositions made at these Works in Gold, Silver, Copper, Brass, Britannia Metal, Iron or Steel, are warranted perfect, and at
